The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move that the House agree to the amendment of the Senate as amended by the House, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, that the House agree to the amendment of the Senate as amended,

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 104, answered "present" 11, not voting 97; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

RECALL OF BILLS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ask that that committee be permitted to recall from the House and have referred back to it the following bills:

H. R. 6035. To provide an American register for the ship Melanope;

H. R. 3788. To provide an American register for the ship Antiope; and

S. 2705. To provide an American register for the barge Admiral Tromp.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, is directed by that committee to ask that it be permitted to recall the bills just referred to, and have them referred back to that committee. The titles of the bills will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk reported the titles of the bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WAGONER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Elections No. 2, I present a privileged report of that committee in the contested-election case of Wagoner v. Butler, from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The same will be printed and referred to the House Calendar. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contested-election case—George C. R. Wagoner v. James J. Butler, Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The report has just been filed and the Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has no right to make that demand.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have the report read, I hope that it will be granted and that the report may be read at this time.

Mr. FEELY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the report be read at this time. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the report, which is as follows:

[House Report No. 3857, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

GEORGE C. R. WAGONER AGAINST JAMES J. BUTLER.

February 24, 1903.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OLMSTED, from the Committee on Elections No. 2, submitted the following report, to accompany H. Res. No. 466:

The Committee on Elections No. 2, to which was referred the contested election case of George C. R. Wagoner v. James J. Butler, from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, respectfully presents the following report:

At the regular Congressional election in 1900 James J. Butler, the Democratic candidate, was returned as having been elected to membership in the Fifty-seventh Congress by a plurality of 3,553. His Republican opponent, William M. Horton, contested his election.

That case was heard by Committee on Elections No. 1, which, in an able and exhaustive report presented by its chairman to this House April 5, 1902, found that frauds numerous and varied had been so extensively practiced in or relating to said election that the honest choice of the voters could not be determined, and recommended a resolution, adopted by this House June 28, 1902, to the effect that there had been no valid election and that the seat held by Mr. Butler be declared vacant. The governor of Missouri ordered a special election to fill the vacancy thus caused, which special election was held Tuesday, November 4, 1902, that being also the day for the regular election of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress. Mr. Butler was returned as elected to fill the vacancy in this present Congress caused by his own unseating, and by the increased plurality of 6,293. He took the oath of office December 1, 1902, and now occupies the seat of which he was once deprived by the action of this House, as above indicated.

His counsel informs your committee that at the same election Mr. Butler was also elected to membership in the Fifty-eighth Congress and by a still larger plurality. No evidence concerning that election has, however, been presented to your committee, and with it this Congress has, in any event, no concern.

Mr. Wagoner, who was not a candidate for membership in the Fifty-eighth Congress, contests the election of Mr. Butler for the remainder of the Fifty-seventh Congress and claims himself to have been lawfully chosen to fill the vacancy.

The notice of contest charges that in and with respect to 63 election precincts, hereinafter named, there were practiced nearly every variety of fraud yet devised for producing unfair and dishonest political results, such as padded registration, repeating, false personation, the reception of ballots from persons whose names were not upon the registration books, and therefore, under the laws of the State of Missouri, not entitled to vote at all, the stuffing of ballot boxes, fraudulent conspiracies on the part of election officers to prevent free voting and honest returns, improper interference by the police, intimidation, and in some instances actual violence. As to some, if not all, of these precincts the charges are well sustained by proof.

The Twelfth Congressional district comprises certain wards and parts of wards, and is wholly within the city of St. Louis. It extends across the city from east to west, the western end, however, being considerably wider and greater in extent than the eastern, which borders upon the Mississippi River. No complaint is made as to the election in the western portion of the district, but the middle and eastern portions embrace what are, let us trust, the worst portions of the city, and contain the lowest classes of her inhabitants. Saloons, bawdyhouses, low theaters, mule stables, boarding houses for roustabouts, gambling houses, etc., here abound in great profusion, and the field is well adapted to corrupt political practices.

The district comprises 116 election precincts. As to 53 of these, counsel for the parties mutually agree that there were no such irregularities as would justify the setting aside or modification of the returns. The following are the 53 precincts thus withdrawn from the contest:

Ward 5: Precinct 8.
Ward 6: Precincts 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13.
Ward 12: Precincts 11, 12.
Ward 13: Precincts 1, 2, 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11.
Ward 14: Precinct 9.
Ward 15: Precincts 5, 7, 8.
Ward 21: Precincts 1, 2.
Ward 22: Precincts 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.
Ward 23: Precincts 5, 8, 9, 10, 11.
Ward 24: Precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.
Ward 25: Precincts 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.
Ward 20: Precinct 1.
Ward 28: Precincts 1, 2.
Total, 53 precincts.

The contestant claims to have proved such frauds and irregularities as to require the throwing out of the returns from all of these 63 precincts. Counsel for contestee, on the other hand, claims that although there may have been irregularities, they were not sufficient to justify the setting aside of any of them.

Although taken within a shorter time than usual, the testimony is much more complete and more intelligently taken with reference to the actual points in controversy than is usual in election cases. It is very voluminous, covering more than 2,300 closely printed pages, in addition to the exhibits.

So much of the testimony has been considered as counsel for the respective parties have pointed out as vital or material. Your committee has also been very materially assisted by elaborate and exhaustive oral argument, as well as by briefs of able and distinguished counsel.

The so-called "Nesbit law," adopted in 1899, provides election machinery applicable to the city of St. Louis only.

Counsel for contestant claim that the provisions of this law give partisan control of the election machinery and facilitate the perpetration of corrupt practices. Counsel for contestee claims that some of its most objectionable provisions were eliminated by the supplementary act of 1901. It appears that in 1898, just prior to the adoption of the "Nesbit law," this particular district elected a Republican Congressman by a majority of 2,321, but since the adoption of the law Democratic majorities have invariably been returned. This of itself may or may not prove anything. It seems to your committee that the law, even as amended, contains some very objectionable features.

The entire election machinery of the whole city is placed under the control of the "board of election commissioners," composed of three members appointed by the governor for the term of four years. The law does, indeed, provide that "one of said commissioners shall be a member of and belong to the leading party politically opposed to that to which the governor belongs." Nevertheless, he is selected by the governor and not likely to be very antagonistic to the party whose governor confers upon him the position. It is provided that—

"Said election commissioners shall make all necessary rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this article, with reference to the registration of voters and conduct of elections, and shall have charge of and make provisions for all elections, general, special, local, municipal, State, and county, and of all others of every description to be held in such city or any part thereof at any time."

The voters in the several election precincts are not permitted to select their own judges, inspectors, and clerks of election; but this board of three election commissioners appointed by the governor is authorized to select for each polling place four judges and two clerks of election. It is, indeed, provided that two of the judges and one of the clerks shall be "designated" by the minority commissioner. It requires, however, the concurrence of at least one of the majority commissioners to make this designation effective.

The provision of the Nesbit law with reference to registration is a striking feature, and, it is believed, unknown to the election machinery of any other city. A voter may upon a certain day register in the precinct in which he lives, but except upon that day registration must be made outside of the precinct, and in many cases outside of the Congressional district, at the office of the central board of election commissioners. The provisions of the Nesbit law upon this matter of registration afford a wide field for fraud. It appears from the testimony that by far the greater portion of the names appearing upon the registration books were placed there not in the precincts where the voters lived, but at the central office of the board of election commissioners.

The four judges of election in each precinct are constituted by law a board of registration for their precinct, but, as already stated, the majority of registrations are made at the office of the board of election commissioners and not with the precinct board.

The general board is required to furnish to the precinct board verification lists. No new names are permitted to be added after "the Saturday following the Tuesday three weeks preceding such election," but the clerks of election are constituted canvassers of their respective precincts and, being supplied with the verification lists, may "come together and canvass their precinct, calling at each dwelling house for the purpose of verifying the register." When that has been done a further meeting is to be had for corrections of the registration. Then it it provided by law that—

* * * * * * *

"SEC. 7238. Judges shall sign registry—registry to be sent to commissioners—commissioners to proceed—how lists public records.

"At the end of the last session provided for the said board of registration and said clerk shall compare and correct the registers aforesaid and make them correspond and agree; and said judges shall then, immediately following the last name on each page of the register, sign their names so that no other name can be added without discovery, and shall return the two registers to the possession of the election commissioners; thereupon the said commissioners shall at once cause copies to be made of such registers, of all the names upon the same, with the address, and arranged according to the streets, avenues, or alleys, commencing with the lowest number and arranging the same in order according to street numbers, and shall then cause such precinct register, under such arrangement, to be printed in sufficient numbers to meet all demands, and upon application a copy of the same shall be given to any person in such precinct. Said registers in the office of the election commissioners shall be public records and open to public inspection."

Duly authenticated copies of all these printed precinct registers are found in the testimony of this case.

Contestant addressed or caused to be addressed and sent through the post-office a registered letter to each person whose name and address were thus shown to be registered in the 63 precincts in controversy. The total number of registered letters thus mailed was 25,179. Of this number 12,608 were returned with indorsements bearing the number of the letter carrier and statements to the effect that the parties were not found at the address given. These letters were mailed, some on the 16th and some on the 17th of December following the election.

Of the 25,179 names appearing on the officially published registry lists, 16,045 do not appear in the city directory for 1902, and as will hereinafter appear, thousands of votes were cast and counted in names not appearing upon either.

Four thousand six hundred and sixty-nine of the registered letters returned bore the statements of the letter carriers to the effect that the parties to whom they were addressed had "removed." Of this 4,669 names of persons appearing upon the registry lists, all of whom "removed" shortly after election, only 245 grace the pages of the St. Louis city directory for 1902.

These registry lists, printed by authority and required by law to be published for the information of the public as to the registration in each precinct, were offered and received in evidence with no objection whatever on the part of the contestee, either as to their authenticity or relevancy, or as to their not being the best evidence. But the minority election commissioner was cross-examined and subsequently called on behalf of contestee for the purpose of showing that they were not correct. He actually testified that they were not, but that a great many of the names which were actually upon the registration books in his office were not included in these printed sheets.

Contestee also placed in evidence the certificate of the secretary of the board of election commissioners, showing 425 names upon the original registration book of Ward 22, precinct 1, whereas the printed registry sheets showed only 205. Also a similar certificate showing 676 names upon the registration book in the office of the board of election commissioners from Ward 4, precinct 7, although the printed registry sheets showed only 169.

These exhibits, offered on behalf of Mr. Butler, seem to your committee to present the highest evidence of fraud. No names could have been honestly placed upon the registration books after the published registry sheets were given out except in a few cases of persons who, having been refused registration in their respective precincts, had appealed to the board of election commissioners. The testimony of the minority commissioner is to the effect that there were not more than 40 of such cases in the entire city of St. Louis, but in this Congressional district alone thousands of persons voted whose names were not upon the printed registry lists, and it now appears from the contestee's own testimony that in one of the precincts above mentioned less than half the names upon the registration books were contained in the printed sheets, and in the other less than a fourth.

This same state of affairs extending throughout the entire district or, at least, throughout the 63 precincts in controversy shows premeditated and deliberate fraud, for either thousands of names were illegally added to the registration after the giving out of the printed sheets or else thousands of the names upon the registration books were deliberately and intentionally omitted from the published lists for the purpose of depriving the public of ascertaining or knowing the extent to which false registration had been made. No such glaring discrepancies as are here apparent can possibly be accounted for upon the ground of accident or ignorance.

Counsel for Butler has insisted with great earnestness that the evidence as to the sending out of the registered letters and the results thereof was improperly offered by contestant in rebuttal, and ought not, therefore, to be considered by your committee. The fact appears to be, however, that the sending of such letters having become public, the person who had charge of the matter was called by contestee himself and much information concerning the results elicited.

An attempt was also made by contestee to impugn the character of this witness for the purpose of discrediting his evidence as to the number of letters sent out and those returned. The contestee himself having proceeded so far in the taking of testimony upon the subject, your committee is unable to see that it was not proper for contestant in rebuttal to place in evidence the letters themselves, bearing the returns of the letter carriers who had attempted to deliver them. We are not prepared, however, to accept the conclusions which the contestant asks us to draw from this testimony. In a given case a man may have been lawfully entitled to vote, although his name did not appear in the city directory published some months before the election and he was not found by the letter carrier a few weeks after the election. We therefore decline to cast out any particular vote or votes upon that ground.

Nevertheless the fact that so great a number of names appearing upon the registry list could not be found either in the directory or by the letter carriers does throw suspicion upon the integrity of the registration. When this is coupled with evidence offered by the contestee himself to show that thousands of names were found upon the registration books which do not appear in the printed lists, and were therefore not embraced within the registered-letter scheme of detection, and that the votes of such persons not upon the registry lists were received by hundreds and thousands throughout these 63 precincts, the conclusion is irresistible that there was premeditated and systematic fraud perpetrated in the interest of the contestee.

It appears from the evidence that, although the law of Missouri expressly provides that no vote shall be received from any person not registered, there were in these 63 precincts actually cast for Mr. Butler 3,017 ballots and for Mr. Wagoner 636 ballots by persons whose names did not appear upon the printed registry sheets submitted to the public. Higher evidence of fraud it would be difficult to imagine.

The constitution of Missouri expressly provides—

"That in all cases of contested elections the ballots cast may be counted, compared with the list of voters, and examined under such safeguards and regulations as may be prescribed by law."

There appear in the evidence in this case the complete registration lists for these 63 precincts, showing the name of every person registered according to the information which the election commissioners supplied to the public immediately before election. Also the poll books giving the name and address of every person who appeared and voted, or at least in whose name a ballot was deposited, and, the boxes having been opened, the evidence showing for what candidate for Congress the ballot voted in that name was cast. With all this information before us it is possible to detect some, though not all, of the frauds which have been perpetrated.

FOURTH WARD, NINTH PRECINCT.

The first witness whose testimony appears in the printed record of this case (p. 13) was James H. Smith, 72 years of age, Republican clerk in precinct 9 of the Fourth Ward. He testified that the Republican judges were Gustav Schmidt and Paul Mertz, and that the Democratic judges were Cosgrove and Heffernan. There were voting booths for but three persons at a time. The police officer at the door was instructed to admit but three persons at a time. Eight, however, came in. Schmidt, one of the Republican judges, made the apparently unusual and unseemly objection that one or more of them who had already voted were trying to vote again, and asked the officer to take them out. After a time they all went out. What followed appears in the testimony thus, commencing at page 14:

"Q. Then what happened?

"A. A sergeant of police came rushing in and says, 'The report is that you have all got arms.'

"Q. Addressing the judges and clerks?

"A. Yes, sir. I was nearest the door; he searched me first and went on and searched them, and when he went around he went to the door; I could still see him where I was standing, and he says, 'Boys, it's all right; there's not a gun in the crowd.'

"Q. Who said that?

"A. Sergeant Lally.

"Q. Sergeant Lally said that?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. To whom did he make that statement?

"A. I suppose to the multitude in front of him.

"Q. How long was that after the eight had gone out?

"A. Probably ten minutes.

"Q. Then what happened?

"A. I do not know just what did happen; about a minute afterwards——

"Q. Why?

"A. It upset me.

"Q. Who upset you?

"A. This gang that ran in.

"Q. What gang?

"A. I don't know.

"Q. How many of them, about?

"A. A room full; I should judge about 30.

"Q. What did they do?

"A. Just hammered up everybody they could reach that was on the Republican side, that represented the Republican ticket.

"Q. Did they hammer you?

"A. I went down; was knocked down at the first kick, and knocked into the corner, and they were all on top of me, and I escaped that way.

"Q. At the bottom?

"A. Yes, sir; I was underneath.

"Q. After that did you see Mr. Mertz and Mr. Schmidt, the Republican judges?

"A. I asked an officer——

"Q. Did you see them?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were they beaten?

"A. They were, yes; beat bad.

"Q. How?

"A. With brass knuckles and pistols, and one thing and another.

"Mr. BUTLER. Please state the facts.

"Q. (By Mr. RICHEY.) Did you see brass knuckles?

"A. I did.

"Q. Did you see pistols?

"A. I did.

"Q. Did you see these men hammered?

"A. I did.

"Q. Did they show the effects of the hammering?

"A. They did.

"Q. Where was the police, then, while this was being done?

"A. I did not see any.

"Q. Had they been there before?

"A. They had been there before.

"Q. In the room?

"A. No; there was one there at this time. Then the sergeant took one of the police and went south.

"Q. There were two policemen there, then?

"A. Before that.

"Q. Before this trouble?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Before that Sergeant Lally stated that there was not a gun in the crown; when he made that statement these people came in and hammered the judges and clerks?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Then, just before that crowd came in, if I understand you, Sergeant Lally took one of the officers away?

"A. He did.

"Q. Who was it?

"A. Horan.

"Q. What became of the other officer?

"A. He remained in the hall until the fight was over and then walked in.

"Q. What was his name?

"A. That I could not tell you.

"Q. You say Sergeant Lally said, 'There is not a gun in the crowd.' Is that true?

"A. It was not true.

"Q. Who had a gun?

"A. I seen Cosgrove with a gun in his hip pocket.

"Q. How long afterwards?

"A. Probably five or ten minutes. He was leaning out of the window.

"Q. Was Heffernan beat up?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Was Cosgrove beaten up?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Was Boys beaten up?

"A. Boys was not there.

"Q. None of the Democrats were beat, were they?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. But all of the Republicans were hurt?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was there a challenger there?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Had there been?

"A. No, sir; if there was one I did not see him.

"Q. When the polls were opened that morning were you there?

"A. I was.

"Q. Did either party have a challenger?

"A. There was something said about it, and they said we didn't need him.

"Q. Who said that?

"A. Cosgrove.

"Q. Was any report made of this trouble to the election commissioner?

"A. There was.

"Q. Did the election proceed?

"A. Until about 3 o'clock.

"Q. That is from 12 or half past until about 3 or a quarter past 3 o'clock at that precinct the election was entirely stopped?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And no votes were received during that time?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Was the ballot box destroyed or any of the election paraphernalia?

"A. The box seemed to be all right; the voting book was taken away.

"Q. The ballot book was taken away?

"A. Yes, sir; the sheets that we were writing names on.

"Q. White or black?

"A. A black man.

"Q. Do you know what names he voted under and from what registration number?

"A. (Witness here examined the same notebook and continued.) He voted as Frank Miller.

"Q. From what number?

"A. 1621 Linden street.

"Q. Also as——

"A. J. Brown.

"Q. From what number?

"A. 1716½ Morgan, and Charles Scott from the same number.

"Q. 1716½ Morgan?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And also as any other person?

"A. He voted as C. Bass, 1623 Morgan street.

"Q. When you spoke of the registration places where Kinney voted the names of Bent, McKinney, Clapp, and Frank, you said 1636 Franklin?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Don't you mean 1636 Morgan?

"A. Franklin avenue. I meant it as I said it. He voted all his votes from 1636 Franklin."

The testimony of this witness is valuable also as showing the utter lack of integrity in the registration of voters. Eighty names had been registered as those of persons living at 1636 Franklin avenue, a saloon. Smith, in his capacity as canvasser, testified that on six different occasions he attempted to verify the registration from this particular saloon, but was refused admittance. Finally, by a trick, he caught at the door the lady who "run the house." Being asked who lived there, she said she did not know. She could remember the names of only three (p. 22).

The matter being reported to the board of election commissioners, appointed by the governor, and having, as already stated, entire charge of the election machinery of the city of St. Louis, it was compromised, not by ascertaining who did live there and who were entitled to vote, but by splitting the difference, striking off 40 and leaving 40 on the list. A man named "Snake" Kinney, who was not a member of the election board, seems to have been very instrumental in fixing up the returns for this precinct.

The testimony of Gustav Schmidt is equally instructive. He says (p. 23):

"Q. You were one of the Republican judges at the election on November 4?

"A. Up to noon.

"Q. Why do you say up to noon?

"A. Because I asked for protection to be carried home, because I was beat up with revolvers and was struck over the head with revolvers, blood running down my face; I was kicked in the stomach, my limbs were skinned from my feet up to my knees, and I was all beat up; in fact, I was unconscious at the time. I wasn't able to go home by myself, so I asked for a police officer to assist me to my home, which he did. There I rested a few minutes, my wife washed the blood off my head; then I went to the doctor at Seventeenth and Franklin, who washed my head with carbolic acid, bandaged up my head, sent me to my home to go in a dark room and go to bed.

I was confined to my bed until the following Friday afternoon; then I went over to him again to examine my head. He told me I better go for a little fresh air for strengthening. I took a car ride about twenty minutes, went back to my home, went right to bed again. I felt too weak to stand on my feet. I stayed in bed until Saturday morning about 10 o'clock. I got up, took a car, went down to the place where I was employed to notify them I was coming back to work Monday morning.

"(Counsel for contestee made the request that other witnesses that were summoned be excluded from the room during the taking of testimony.)

"(Counsel for contestant answered that the rule regarding the exclusion of witnesses did not apply to civil cases of this nature.)

"(Counsel for contestee called attention to the fact that there were at that time six witnesses in the room, called for to-day, listening to the witness who is testifying.)

"The witness resumed:

"I went down to my work; I was expecting to go back to work on Monday morning; course I was weak, but I tried to go. The way this trouble started, first out of the registration. The one that registered, I detected on the day of registration, brought in the poll books against the laws of the State of Missouri for any name to be scratched on the register and another entered up in its place. This is done all through the books, and they are mutilated and, in fact, changed. In fact, changed the law of the State of Missouri. Furthermore, I detected fraud. In front of my own name is R. I detected a big R in the books branding me as Republican. Mr. Mertz was branded a Republican; in front of his name and several others the same way, and this registration was wrong. I detected at the House 1636 Franklin 81 registered, while Griffin, the delegate for our ward, is running a saloon there. There was 81 registered out of that house. There was 24 registered at 1729 Lucas, which is not in existence at all, is no such number as that, and at 1626 Morgan street there was 11 registered, which I canvassed myself and was in the house; found 5; 6 not to be found. The owner of the house stated to me they never lived there.

"Q. How many did not live there?

"A. Five out of the 11.

"Q. Those you did not find?

"A. Six I did not find; 5 I found.

"(Counsel for contestee called attention to the fact that a colored man was taking notes in the back of the house.)

"(The man stated that he was writing a note to a gentleman in the room whom he had come to see.)

"Witness resumed:

"I asked the judges and clerks, Republican and Democratic judges; I said, 'Gentlemen, will you do your duty as judges and clerks?' I said, 'What results did you get out of the house 1636 Franklin?' They answered me, 'They are all there.' I knew better at the time. I asked him in regard to 1636 Morgan; I got the same answer. 1729 Lucas, the same answer. So I refused to sign the books. I was going before the election commissioners. I believe it was on Friday—I am not quite certain, to the best of my knowledge—I refused to sign the books.

"Q. That is the registration book?

"A. I asked the clerks if they sent out any notices; they told me 'No.' So I refused to sign the books. I was called before the board of election commissioners—in fact, all of us was called there on Friday. I came in and the balance of the judges and clerks of both parties was there, and I was asked by Judge McCaffery, a Democratic member, asked me the reason why I would not sign. I asked Mr. McCaffery if he wanted me to commit a barefaced fraud by signing such a fraudulent book. He says, 'Where is the fraud?' I showed it to them; I showed the names erased, other names put in the place which you can see, and that changes the constitution of the State. So he would not agree to that and I kept on wrangling with him, and I would not sign the book. So they told us to go outside and we went in. In about fifteen or twenty minutes I was asked again to sign them. I says, 'No;' so Mr. McCaffery says 'What do you want?' I says, 'I want a recanvass of that whole precinct and the Republican clerks discharged at once.' That was granted; we got a new Republican clerk and the canvass proceeded. Then we were called before the board of commissioners on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, previous to the election. We went over the books. I handled the register of the Democrats. The Democratic judge handled the Republican register and it was a duplicate of the Republican. We read off the names—I done it myself—and we went over every one and kept a tally of 1636 Franklin and made sure that these 81 names were on it. I have the tally here that I kept. The same at 1729 Lucas and several others. He read the names off after we got through. I says, 'Gentlemen, what do you propose to do with them 81 names at 1636 Franklin?' They said, 'We propose to leave them on the books.'

"Q. Who did?

"A. Both the Democratic judges. I says, 'I will not sign those books.'

"Q. Do you mean the Democratic judges?

"A. Yes; they wanted to leave the names on.

"Q. Or do you mean the commissioners?

"A. No; I mean the judges. So I refused to sign them again. We went before Mr. McCaffery, chairman, and he says: 'This is the last chance you get.' He says: 'This fuss has got to stop; I get sick and tired of you.' I looked him square in the face and he showed it, so he hit his hand on the table like this and commenced using language that didn't suit me as a respectable citizen of St. Louis. I refused to sign the books again, so we kept on and kept on until the commissioners got Mr. Louis P. Aloe to come to me, and he says: 'Mr. Schmidt, they will agree to make a compromise and take off 40 names.' I said: 'I want the whole 81 off, unless they show they live there, unless they show me the proof that they live in that house. They have got to agree to that.' Finally I says: 'If I do sign these books it will be under protest; outside of that I will not sign it.' The book was signed.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Do you know Mr. Kinney?

"A. Well, he was pointed out to me on the street as 'Snake' Kinney. I addressed him as such and he didn't deny it.

"Q. Did you see him at this polling place on election day?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Whereabouts?

"A. Standing alongside of the Democratic judge handling the books.

"Q. Who handled the books?

"A. 'Snake' Kinney and Cosgrove.

"Q. How long was 'Snake' Kinney in there standing by the side of the Democratic judge?

"A. About three-fourths of an hour to the best of my knowledge. He led the gang. They commenced beating as soon as he came in.

"Q. This 'Snake' Kinney came into the polling place—came back where the judges and clerks were?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you make any protest?

"A. I made a protest; it didn't do any good.

"Q. What did you say?

"A. I told them nobody who is not an officer has to handle the polls and has to get out. The door was blocked off and I could not get near the policeman.

"Q. What did Cosgrove and the other Democratic judge do?

"A. Nothing at all; just showed him all the books and the names in it.

"Q. He took part in the election?—A. Yes, sir; in fact, they voted some three or four times right in front of my face. I says, 'Kinney, you know this is fraud.' He says 'You are mistaken.' They voted three or four times in front of me.

"Q. That was done in the presence of 'Snake' Kinney and under his protection?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The repeating you speak of, by that you mean a man who voted more than once, began voting after 'Snake' Kinney came in there?—A. Yes, sir."

The testimony of these witnesses is fully corroborated by that of Mertz (p. 33).

We have in evidence the registration list, which contains, or ought to contain, the names of all persons entitled to vote in this precinct. The manner in which it was made up appears from the testimony cited. There has been also offered in evidence the poll book, which, as that term is used in Missouri, means a book supplied in blank and in duplicate to the election officers. The numbers 1, 2, 3, etc., are printed at the beginning of each line. The name and address of the first person who appears and votes is, or should be, written in the first line. The name and address of the second person in the second line, etc.

Each voter is, or should be, given a ballot numbered to correspond with the number of the line upon which his name and address are written. This poll book, which is thus made up as the voting proceeds, should show the name and address of each person voting. It has been offered in evidence (p. 459). It contains the names, addresses, and numbers of 258 persons who are supposed to have appeared and voted in this precinct.

The ballot box was opened, and commencing on page 796 will be found a statement showing the number of each ballot found therein and the name of the candidate for whom said ballot was voted for the short term for Congress. A study of these tables shows remarkable results. According to the poll book, 258 persons, and no more, whose names and addresses are given, appeared and voted. There were found in the ballot box 260 ballots. According to the poll book, 258 was the highest number of ballot voted, but there were found in the box ballots numbered 270, 275, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 310, 312, 314, 315, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 323, 328, 335, 349, 351, 352, and 898—25 numbers in all, none of which appear upon the poll book, and all of which were counted for Butler.

Another remarkable fact is that ballots numbered 43, 115, 117, 118, 120, 121 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 130, 131, 134, 136, 137, 138, 139, 142, 144, 146, 149. 150, 151, 152, 154, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 167, 168, 180, 181, 182, 183, 185 and 221—45 in all—were voted and counted twice for Butler, while ballot No. 137 was voted and counted three times for him. In other words, these 46 persons in repeating did not even take the usual precaution of voting under different names. How many times they voted under other names will never be known.

The further fact, still more significant, if possible, is that as to 77 names of persons appearing in the poll book no corresponding ballots are found in the box at all. These numbers are 3, 5, 12, 13, 20, 34, 37, 39, 46, 48, 52, 55, 58, 61, 64, 71, 77, 78, 80, 89, 105, 109, 111, 112, 113, 178, 187, 188, 190, 191, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199. 200. 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 211, 213, 215, 216, 221, 226, 227, 228, 231, 233, 234, 236, 237, 238, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, and 258.

Thus, if the integrity of the poll book can be assumed, it appears that 77 ballots cast were not found in the ballot box at all, their places being supplied in part by the duplication of other numbers upon the poll book and the addition of 25 numbers not found on the poll book. Those who fixed up this return tried to make the accounts balance. There were 258 names and numbers on the poll book, and they returned 258 votes, 237 for Butler and 21 for Wagoner. But even counting the 45 duplications and 1 triplication and the 25 additional votes not accounted for on the poll book at all, there were in the box only 227 ballots bearing Butler's name, while there were 28 bearing Wagoner's, 3 bearing the name of Artz, and 1 containing no name for Congress.

Election signifies choice. In view of this array of facts it needs no argument to show that the returns from this precinct afford no evidence whatever as to the choice of the voters. The registration, the conduct of the election, the poll books, and the returns are all fraudulent and utterly unreliable. There was ballot-box stuffing and ballot-box robbing and nearly every form of irregularity known to political history.

WARD 23, PRECINCT 13.

The "Butler stables," so called, are located in this precinct. One hundred and ten men were registered as living in this stable and 61 of them voted for Butler. Mr. John R. McCarthy, the superintendent having charge of the stable, testified to the effect that these men and others—sometimes as many as 200—slept in that stable (p. 2043). He did not pretend that the stable owners furnished sleeping accommodations, but said the men were allowed to furnish their own beds. Being asked if these men were married, he answered (p. 2044):

"Q. Are any of them married men, as far as you know?

"A. Well, on pay night you would think they had a dozen wives. I have seen three and four come up and say they were the same man's wife."

Where these men boarded he did not state. From his testimony we are asked to infer that this great body of men, most of them married, lived in this stable, apart from their wives and families.

He testified that they had been so living for years. He is directly contradicted by Mr. H. G. Schirr. He testified as follows (p. 80):

"Q. Now, you said in answer to Mr. Bond's question that you were well acquainted in that precinct?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How long have you lived in that precinct?

"A. All my life.

"Q. How long have you been working at the grocery store there at 3363 Manchester avenue?

"A. I have been away a couple of times, three or four times.

"Q. How long have you been working there off and on?

"A. Off and on altogether about nine years.

"Q. Now, how long this last time have you been working there?

"A. About a year.

"Q. Now, how far away are the stables at 3865 Forest Park Boulevard from where your grocery store is?

"A. Two blocks.

"Q. Do you know those stables?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. By whom were they conducted; under what name were they operated or run?

"A. The Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company.

"Q. What other name have they?

"A. They generally call them Butler's stables.

"Q. What sort of a building are the stables?
"A. A regular stable; horse stable.
"Q. How many stories?
"(Mr. Butler, the contestee, objects to this examination as not being an examination growing out of anything that has been drawn out in the cross-examination, and as being original or direct examination.)
"Mr. HOLTCAMP. We will simply say that Judge Bond's question went to the matter of this witness's going around in that neighborhood and canvassing and examining into this registration.
"Mr. WALSH. That question grew out of a statement made in the original examination that this witness knew of the number of voters living in this precinct, and was a natural question growing out of the original examination.
"Mr. HOLTCAMP. And it is not unnatural for us to pursue it.
"(Counsel for the contestee states that he makes this objection to all this redirect examination of this witness.)
"Mr. RICHEY. How many stories are there to that building?
"A. Two.
"Q. Have you been in the second story?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What was there?
"A. Hay and oats.
"Q. When were you there with reference to election and registration days?
"A. I was there one evening, I don't recollect which.
"Q. How long before the election, about?
"A. About three or four months.
"Q. Were there any beds on that second floor?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Nothing but the feed?
"A. That is all, oats and hay.
"Q. Now the first floor, for what was that used?
"A. For stock.
"Q. What kind of stock?
"A. Mules and horses.
"Q. Any bedrooms in the building anywhere?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Did anybody live at that number, 3865?
"A. No, sir; not that I know of.
"Q. Now, did you look into the registration from that number?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you know how many votes were on the registration list from that number?
"A. No; I did not count them just exactly, but I know there is over a hundred.
"Q. Would you remember the number if you were told?
"A. No; I don't think I would.
"Q. Did you know, at the day of the election, of men voting on these one hundred or more names registered from these stables, 3865 Forest Park boulevard?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did men vote on those names on that day?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What time in the day was it?
"A. From a quarter to 5; beginning at a quarter to 5.
"Q. Then the men who voted on these names from that stable voted there during this rush that you have spoken of in your direct examination?
"A. Yes, sir. There was a few of them in the morning.
"Q. About how many, as near as you can tell, voted from there during the day?
"A. About six or seven.
"Q. Six or seven from the whole number located at that stable?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Up to what time?
"A. A quarter to 5.
"Q. After that time about how many voted from there?
"A. I don't know; I guess about all of them."

Of the 110 persons registered from this stable 108 were not reached by registered letters addressed to them, the carriers returning the letters with notations showing that the parties had removed or were not to be found at that address.

It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to reconcile the testimony of these witnesses, as there are other considerations equally important.

Mr. Schirr was one of the Republican judges in this precinct, and the manner in which the poll book was made up appears from his testimony as follows (p. 188):

"Q. Was there anything in connection with the signing of the returns or the poll books at your precinct, the thirteenth precinct of the Thirteenth Ward, that you omitted to tell us when you were on the stand before?
"Mr. ROWE. I object to the question as being too vague, too indefinite, too uncertain.
"Q. Answer the question, please.
"A. Why, there was something that I didn't like to speak of, but being that you want to hear it, I will tell it all to you.
"Q. What was it?
"A. We brought the box down there.
"Q. Who brought it down?
"A. Me and Mr. Hunterbrinker and the other judge, Mr. O'Connor.
"Q. You brought the box down where?
"A. The box and poll books down to the board of election commissioners, and he told me we didn't have the poll books made out right, and that we better make them out right.
"Q. Who told you that?
"A. The young fellow that was there at the election commissioners' office.
"Q. One of the clerks there?
"A. One of the clerks; yes.
"Q. He told you so?
"A. He told us the poll books were not made out right.
"Q. How had the books been made out? How were they made out at that time?
"A. We only had one poll book, and that was signed.
"Q. Hadn't you used but one poll book during the day?
"A. That is all; used but one.
"Q. What did this young man, the clerk of the board of election commissioners, tell you?
"A. He told us to take them back and fix them up; that is what he told us.
"Q. Take them back where?
"A. Back to the polling place.
"Q. What time of the night was that?
"A. About half past 11 o'clock, I believe.
"Q. On the night of the election?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Were all the Republican and Democratic judges and clerks present at that time?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Who was present?
"A. Me and a young fellow, Mr. O'Connor, the other judge.
"Q. Mr. O'Connor was there as the Democratic judge?
"A. Yes.
"Q. And you were there as the Republican judge?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And was anybody else there from that precinct?
"A. No; that is all that was there, except Hunterbrinker went along with us.
"Q. Was he a Republican or Democrat?
"A. He was the Republican clerk.
"Q. He went along with you?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Who carried the ballot box and poll books and so on down there?
"A. Young O'Connor carried them down.
"Q. Is that Connor or O'Connor?
"A. O'Connor.
"Q. What did you do when you were directed by this clerk of the board of election commissioners to take the poll book back to the polling place?
"A. Couldn't do nothing. I got scared and went away.
"Q. You did what?
"A. I got scared and left the book and box there and went away. They left me there with the box.
"Q. Who left you there with the box?
"A. The two young fellows, and I didn't know what to do with them, and so I left them there.
"Q. O'Connor went off and left you with the box?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And Hunterbrinker went off and left you with the box and poll books?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And what did you do with it?
"A. Throwed them in a case; that is all I know. I gave them to that young man, the clerk in the commissioners' office, and I went away.
"Q. I understand you but one of the poll books had been signed by the judges and clerks?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. When did you hear, if you did hear, from the commissioners about the matter?
"A. Two days after the election.
"Q. Tell us what happened then.
"A. The clerk came out with a policeman and told me to be down there at 2 o'clock, and if I didn't, why, he would come out and get me.
"Q. Do you know the clerk's name?
"A. No; I do not.
"Q. Where did he say he was from?
"A. The same young man who took the box from me.
"Q. The same young man you had seen before at the election commissioners', who told you that you should take the box and poll books back to the polling place and have them fixed up and signed?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What did he say to you?
"A. Told me if I didn't come down there at 2 o'clock he would come out and get me.
"Q. What did you do?
"A. I went down there and straightened it out and signed it up.
"Q. How did you straighten it out?
"A. Copied it off from the one poll book onto the other two.
"Q. How many poll books were there?
"A. Three poll books.
"Q. You made two copies two days after the election with that one book that had been copied on election day?
"A. Yes.
"Q. Did you sign and did all the other judges and clerks sign these two books filled out two days subsequently?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Why did you sign them?
"A. Well, I was scared.
"Q. What scared you?
"A. Well, the coming out with a policeman is one thing that scared me, and then there was several other parties down there.
"Q. Down where?
"A. Down at the election commissioners' office.
"Q. Who were the other parties that were down there?
"A. Well, there was one of them named McCarthy; that is all the name I know.
"Q. Who was McCarthy?
"A. He was working for Butler—the Excelsior Hauling Company.
"Q. As an employee?
"A. Some kind of a boss; that is all I know.
"Q. And he was there, was he?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Where did McCarthy live?
"A. I don't know.
"Q. How did you know that he worked for the Excelsior Hauling Company?
"A. Well, I saw him up there.
"Q. Acting as a boss?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. That was near where you lived, or near your place of business, that you saw him?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And you knew who he was?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Now, why were you afraid of McCarthy? Just tell us.
"A. Well, I couldn't say why. I was ascared, that's all.
"Q. Well, what is there about McCarthy or his reputation that would frighten a person?
"A. Well, I don't know nothing about that.
"Q. Tell us what frightened you?
"A. I thought he had no business down there nohow, and he scared me; that is all I know; didn't say nothing more about it.
"Q. Who demanded that you sign these poll books? Did you see any particular election commissioner that day?
"A. Yes; I saw Mr.—I forget his name—Mr. McCaffrey.
"Q. Mr. James McCaffrey?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. The president of the board?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You saw him there?

"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What did he say to you, if anything, or in your presence?
"A. Well, we were fixing up the books, and he told us to sign them after we had straightened them out; that is all.
"Q. Where was this?
"A. Up at the election commissioners' office.
"Q. Were you inside of the office, or where were you?
"A. Well, we were in the office.
"Q. Where was McCarthy?
"A. He came in once, and then he went outside and stayed outside.
"Q. How do you know he stayed outside?
"A. Because he was there when we came out.
"Q. Do you mean to say you were frightened and intimidated by the presence of McCarthy?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And also by the fact that the clerk had come out there with a policeman and threatened to come after you if you didn't come down?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You went down under those threats, and because of that fear signed the poll books?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And they were copies made two days after the original had been made?
"A. No; we copied them off the one poll book.
"Q. But you did that two days after the election, after the first poll book had been made?
"A. Yes, sir."

The poll book, in which the law requires that there shall be written not only the name but the address of each person who appears and votes, contains the names of 435 persons (p. 495). This book is kept in duplicate. The first person who voted was W. B. Finch. On one of the poll books he is recorded as living at 4692 Laclede and the other book gave no address at all. As to the other 434 persons who are recorded as appearing and voting not a single address has been given. This important legal requirement for preserving the integrity of the poll book has been wholly disregarded, except as to the first person who appeared and voted. Although, according to the poll book, 435 persons only appeared and voted, 440 ballots were found in the box (p. 763).

The following numbers appearing in the poll book were duplicated in the ballot box and counted twice for Butler, viz: 37, 112, 129, 147, 158, 182, 202, 203, 245, 262, 289, 295, 296, 347, 355, 389, 428. Ballot No. 6 was voted three times for Butler.

The following numbers appearing upon the poll book as having been voted were not found in the ballot box at all, viz: 3, 7, 23, 27, 35, 60, 127, 131, 132, 183, 189, 211, 215, 228, 229, 232, 237, 243, 250, 252, 277, 282, 287, 288, 297, 302, 303, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 329, 330, 331, 332, 352, 362, 365, 398, 404, 405, 411, 423, and 427. In other words, if the poll book is correct, the ballot box was robbed of 46 ballots lawfully deposited.

Including the duplications aforesaid, there were found in the ballot box 347 ballots bearing Butler's name, but the return from this precinct gives him 362 votes. There were found 73 ballots bearing Wagoner's name. The returns give him 69. There were three ballots in the name of Artz, but the returns give him none.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 5.

The poll book (p. 398) shows 426 persons to have voted in Ward 22, precinct 5. The opening of the ballot box (p. 662) disclosed 425 ballots in the box. Of this number 340 (including 28 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 332. Eighty-four ballots bore Wagoner's name. The returns give him 70. Eighteen persons in this precinct voted twice upon the same names and numbers. Ten others each voted twice upon the same name and address, but upon differently numbered ballots. As to 23 persons, the duplicate poll books did not agree, there being differences either in name or in address. Ninety-one persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration sheets. There were missing from the ballot box when opened 26 ballots of persons who, according to the poll book, had appeared and voted.

WARD 15, PRECINCT 10.

The poll book (p. 395) shows 171 persons as having voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 814) disclosed 167 ballots. Not a single one of these ballots was numbered, as required by law, and it is therefore impossible to tell what ballot was voted by any particular person whose name appears upon the poll book, or whether any of them were voted by the persons whose addresses thus appear. Eighty-nine ballots bearing Butler's name were found in the ballot box. The returns give him 98. Fifty-nine bore Wagoner's name. The returns give him 61. By reason of the absence of numbers upon these ballots it is impossible to tell whether all or any of these ballots cast by persons who, according to the poll book, did appear and vote, were found in the box or whether the persons who cast the ballots which were found in the box were registered voters, or whether, as in most of the other precincts, there were duplications of ballots by the same voters. The provision of the Missouri statute upon this subject is as follows:

"SEC. 7247. Procedure when ballot is offered by voter in cases of challenge.—One of the said judges of election shall receive the ballot from the voter, and shall announce his residence and name in a loud voice, and shall write on the back of said ballot the number of the same, in the order in which it was received, which number shall also be placed opposite the name of the voter in the poll book in the column headed 'number,' and another judge shall put the vote in the ballot box in the presence of the voter and the judges and clerks, and in plain view of the public. The judge or clerk having charge of the registry shall then, in a column prepared thereon, in the same line of the name of the voter, mark 'Voted,' or the letter 'V.'

"If such person so registered shall be challenged or disqualified, the party challenging shall assign his reason therefor, and thereupon one of said judges shall administer to him an oath to answer questions, and he shall be questioned by said judge or judges touching such cause of challenge and touching any other cause of his disqualifications, and may also be questioned by the person challenging him in regard to his qualifications and identity; but if a majority of the judges are of the opinion that he is the person so registered and a qualified voter his vote shall then be received accordingly. The vote of no one shall be received by said judges whose name does not appear upon the books of registration as a qualified voter."

Whether the provision as to numbering the ballot should be considered as mandatory or as merely directory it is not important to consider. Ordinarily, an honest voter ought not to be deprived of his vote by any dereliction on the part of the election officers, but where the action or inaction of election officers renders it impossible to ascertain the honest vote in a precinct, the whole return must be rejected. It seems incredible that 171 or 167 persons could have voted without noticing that their ballots were not numbered.

WARD 15, PRECINCT 6.

The poll book (p. 479) shows 140 persons to have voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 753) disclosed 139 ballots. Ninety-three of these (including 4 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 95. Fifteen ballots bore the initials of but one judge, whereas the law requires two. Thirty-two ballots cast for Butler, 16 for Wagoner, and 2 for Artz were not numbered as required by law. Four ballots were duplicated and counted for Butler. Notwithstanding the fact that the number of ballots found in the box is only one less than the number of persons whom the poll book shows to have voted, 52 names appearing upon the poll book as having voted were not found represented by ballots in the box when opened, their numbers being missing. It is impossible to ascertain whether the unnumbered ballots were cast by persons whose names appeared upon the poll book.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 10.

The poll book (p. 359) shows 469 persons to have voted in Ward 14, precinct 10. The opening of the ballot box (p. 748) disclosed 454 ballots. Of this number (including 72 duplications), 340 bore the name of Butler. The returns give him 383. Wagoner's ballots numbered 104. The returns give him 89. Forty-eight persons voted whose names did not appear on the printed registration list. Thirty-one ballots voted for Butler and 2 for Wagoner were not numbered as required by law. Four hundred and thirteen ballots bore the initials of but one judge, whereas the law requires two. If the poll book is correct, 140 persons voted in vain, as their ballots were not found in the box when opened. Even assuming that the 23 unnumbered ballots were cast by some of these persons, there would still be left 107 wholly disfranchised, as no ballots corresponding with their numbers were found in the box.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 6.

The poll book (p. 502) shows that 253 persons appeared and voted. The ballot box when opened was found to contain 244 ballots (p. 740). One hundred and eighty-five of these (including 31 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 190. Sixty-four ballots were cast by persons whose names did not appear on the printed registration lists. Eleven ballots bore the initials of but one judge, the law requiring two. Nine persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. Twenty-two persons voted twice for him upon the same name and address, but with different numbers. There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 16 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted, no ballots bearing their numbers having been found therein.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 4.

The poll book for Ward 14, precinct 4, shows (p. 462) 230 persons to have voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 802) showed 217 ballots therein. Of this number 171 (including 7 duplications) bore the name of Butler. The returns give him 179. Forty-five ballots for Wagoner were found in the box. The returns give him 49. Seventy-five ballots were cast by persons whose names do not appear upon the printed registration list. Seven persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. Eleven ballots were missing from the box of persons who appeared and voted, according to the poll book.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 2.

The poll book for Ward 14, precinct 2, shows 235 persons to have voted (p. 352). The opening of the ballot box (p. 799) disclosed 230 ballots in the box. Of these 179 (including 4 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns gave him 180. Forty-seven bore Wagoner's name. The returns give him 35. Eighty-five persons voted whose names are not on the registration list. Twenty-seven ballots bore the initials of but one judge, the law requiring two. Five ballots were cast for Butler by persons whose names do not appear upon the poll book. Four persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. Ten ballots were missing from the box of persons whose names appeared upon the poll book as having voted.

WARD 13, PRECINCT 5.

The poll book shows 242 persons to have voted in Ward 13, precinct 5 (p. 373). The opening of the ballot box (p. 757) disclosed the presence therein of 239 ballots. Butler's name (including 12 duplications) appeared on 133; the returns give him 135. Wagoner's name appeared on 94; the returns give him 90. Twelve persons voted twice for Mr. Butler upon the same names and numbers. Twelve persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list. Fifteen ballots were missing from the box of persons shown by the poll book to have voted.

WARD 7, PRECINCT 12.

The poll book (p. 486) shows 177 persons to have voted in Ward 7, precinct 12. The opening of the ballot box (p. 638) disclosed 83 ballots (including 2 duplications) bearing the name of Butler. The returns give him 22. Wagoner had 69. The returns give him 61. Eleven persons voted whose names were not on the registration list. Two persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. There were missing from the box the ballots of 15 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 6, PRECINCT 12.

According to the poll book (p. 390) there appeared and voted in Ward 6, precinct 12, 187 persons. The opening of the ballot box (p. 657) disclosed 170 ballots. Of this number, 104 (including 6 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 108. Wagoner had 69. The returns give him 61. Forty-four persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list.

Seven ballots bore the initials of but 1 judge, the law requiring 2. Six persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. Eleven ballots were missing from the box of persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 6, PRECINCT 8.

According to the poll book (p. 530) 372 persons voted in Ward 6, precinct 8. The opening of the ballot box (p. 628) disclosed 365 ballots. Of this number 308 (including 22 duplications) bore the name of Butler. The returns give him 339. Forty-eight were cast for Wagoner. The returns give him 32. Twenty-two persons voted twice for Butler upon the same names and numbers. Sixty-five persons voted whose names do not appear upon the printed registration list. There were missing from the box the ballots of 29 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 8.

According to the poll book 545 persons whose names are given appeared and voted in precinct 8, Ward 14 (p. 466). When the ballot box was opened there were found only 507 (p. 743). The ballots as found in the box show that 56 numbers were voted twice and counted for Butler each time. Including this duplication, there were found in the box 419 ballots bearing Butler's name. The returns give him 422. Forty-eight ballots were found bearing Wagoner's name. The returns give him 51. Two ballots were voted for Artz. The returns give him none.

One hundred and thirty-two persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted were not represented in the ballot box, the ballots bearing their numbers not having been found therein, viz, 19, 23, 47, 50, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 73, 75, 76, 85, 93, 98, 115, 117, 120, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 146, 153, 162, 163, 165, 166, 168, 173, 178, 181, 185, 194, 197, 199, 200, 201, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 225, 227, 238, 245, 249, 251, 254, 269, 291, 298, 302, 309, 326, 331, 346, 356, 359, 361, 364, 366, 367, 372, 373, 377, 382, 391, 393, 394, 395, 396,

397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 418, 423, 437, 438, 448, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 459, 460, 463, 463, 480, 481, 490, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 509, 516, 522, 524, 544, 545.

The names of 187 persons who voted in this precinct do not appear upon the printed registration list.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 1.

The printed registration list in Ward 22, precinct 1, contains the names and addresses of 205 persons. Contestee placed in evidence the certificate of the secretary of the board of election commissioners, giving what purports to be the names and addresses of 425 persons that appear "in the original registration book of Ward 22, precinct 1, of the city of St. Louis, Mo." This evidence is damning. Either there were additional names fraudulently added after the printed registration lists were issued, or else the names previously registered were fraudulently omitted from the printed lists given out to the public. Neither the incompetency nor ignorance of the clerks or of the officials can account for a discrepancy of 220 names in making out a list purporting to contain 425 names. The same discrepancy is manifest in other precincts, hundreds of persons having voted whose names were not upon the printed registration lists.

According to the poll book (p. 481) 406 persons appeared and voted at this precinct, being 201 more than the names appearing on the printed registration list and only 19 less than the total number registered according to the aforesaid certificate of the clerk. Whether compared with one or the other the percentage of voters to the total of registration is the largest on record, but even this record was beaten by the ballot box itself, which was found to contain 417 votes (p. 634). Of the votes found in the box 302 bore Butler's name. The kindly gentlemen who had charge of the election, however, were good enough to return 395 for him, showing some partiality as against Wagoner, whose 80 ballots found in the box were reduced by the returns to 8.

One hundred and eighty-seven persons whose names were not upon the printed registration list voted for Mr. Butler, and 9 of them voted twice upon the same numbers. Seventy-five persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted were not given representation in the ballot box, their ballots not being found therein.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 1.

In Ward 4, precinct 1, 231 persons appeared and voted, as shown by the poll book (p. 437), but only 219 ballots were found in the box. Of these 182 bore Butler's name. The returns gave him 197. Twenty-nine bore Wagoner's name. The returns gave him 26. Seventy-eight persons voted for Butler and 1 for Wagoner whose names were not on the printed registration list. Fourteen persons voted twice for Butler upon the same numbers, and their votes were all counted.

Thirty-one persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted were not represented in the ballot box; the ballots bearing their names were not found therein. Thirteen ballots counted for Butler bore the initials of but one judge, and 1 ballot counted for him was not initialed by either election judge, although the law requires that two judges shall have placed their initials thereon before it shall be deposited in the box.

Among other instances which tend to throw suspicion upon the integrity of the registration may be noted the fact that in this precinct 22 persons registered from 407 North Levee reached the place of registration in alphabetical order, but must have walked backward to do so, as the Zs arrived there first and the As last. All who voted voted for Butler. This remarkable incident shows careful prearrangement either upon the part of persons who honestly appeared in person and registered, as the law requires, or on the part of persons who fraudulently presented their names to dishonest registration officers.

WARD 14, PRECINCT 11.

According to the poll book (p. 317) 227 persons appeared and voted in Ward 14, precinct 11, but only 222 ballots were found in the box (p. 222). One hundred and forty-eight of these ballots, including 15 duplications, bore Butler's name; the return gives him 156. Sixty-four bore Wagoner's name; the return gives him 61. Forty-nine persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list. Fifteen voted twice for Butler upon the same numbers, and 22 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted were denied the privilege of having their ballots found in the box when the same was opened.

WARD 23, PRECINCT 4.

According to the poll book (p. 675) 225 persons appeared and voted in Ward 23, precinct 4; 252 ballots were found in the box. Of this number, 196, including 10 duplications, bore Butler's name; the returns generously gave him 206. Forty-one bore Wagoner's name; the returns gave him 37. Fifty persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list. Twenty-seven ballots counted for Butler bore the initials of but one judge. Ten persons who voted for Butler did themselves the honor of voting twice each upon the same name and number, and all the ballots were counted.

Eighteen persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted in this precinct, were not represented by any ballot found in the box.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 9.

According to the poll book (p. 481) 290 persons appeared and voted. There were found in the box (p. 634) 289 ballots. Of these, 169 (including 29 duplications) bore Butler's name; the election returns give him 192. Ninety-nine ballots bore Wagoner's name; the returns give him 86. Forty-seven persons voted for Butler and 27 for Wagoner whose names were not on the printed registration list.

Twenty-nine persons each voted twice for Butler without the formality of changing either their names or numbers. Although the number of ballots in the box was but one less than the number of persons recorded in the poll book as having voted, nevertheless the ballots of 43 persons recorded as voting were not found in the box.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 12.

According to the poll book (p. 491) 267 persons appeared and voted in Ward 22, precinct 12. There were found in the ballot box (p. 819) only 261 ballots. Of this number, 140 (including 2 duplications) bore Butler's name; the generous election officers returned 193. Ninety bore Wagoner's name; the returns uncharitably reduced this to 65. Thirty persons voted for Butler and 11 for Wagoner whose names are not on the printed registration list. The opening of the ballot box failed to disclose any ballots cast by 22 different persons whose names appear on the poll book as having voted.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 7.

The poll book for Ward 22, precinct 7, shows that 106 persons appeared and voted (p. 520); the ballot box (p. 818) contained 175 ballots; 62 of these (including 8 duplications) bore Butler's name, but in the count he was generously awarded 111, while Wagoner's 82 was reduced to 75. Eight gentlemen were so kind to Mr. Butler as to duplicate their ballots for him. Eleven ballots shown by the poll book to have been cast were missing from the box when it was opened.

WARD 6, PRECINCT 3.

The poll book (p. 411) gives the names of 242 persons who voted in Ward 6, precinct 3. The opening of the ballot box (p. 655) discloses 300 ballots therein. Of these 243 (including 16 duplications) were for Butler. The returns give him 250. Wagoner had 46 ballots in the box. The returns give him 28. Sixty persons voted in this precinct whose names do not appear upon the printed registration list.

Twelve persons voted twice for Butler on the same names and numbers, and 4 voted twice with the same names and addresses, but with different numbers. Fourteen ballots were missing from the box of persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 4.

According to the poll book (p. 509) 531 persons voted in Ward 5, precinct 4. The opening of the ballot box (p. 631) showed 528 ballots therein.

Of this number 490 (including 54 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 490. Wagoner had 31 ballots in the box, but the returns give him 34.

Ninety-seven persons voted in this precinct whose names do not appear upon the printed registration list.

Forty-six persons voted twice for Butler on the same names and numbers, and 8 voted twice upon the same names and addresses, but upon different numbers.

There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 50 persons shown by the poll book to have appeared and voted.

Eighty-six persons in this precinct registered from one building, 221 Elm street, apparently lined up at the registration office in alphabetical order, as did also, with some slight variations, 23 persons from 113 Sixth street; 63 persons registering from 20 Eighth street, probably by pure chance, presented themselves in alphabetical order without a break.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 2.

The poll book (p. 369) shows 253 persons to have voted in Ward 5, precinct 2. The opening of the ballot box (p. 812) showed 248 ballots in the box.

Of this number, 136 (including 16 duplications) bore Butler's name; the returns give him 141. Wagoner had 111 ballots; the returns give him 110.

Thirty-four persons voted whose names were not upon the printed registration list.

Sixteen persons voted twice for Butler on the same names and numbers.

There are missing from the ballot box the ballots of 30 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 7.

According to the printed registration list there were 169 registered voters in Ward 4, precinct 7. Contestee, however, offered in evidence a certificate of the secretary of the board of election commissioners showing that "the original registration book of Ward 4, precinct 7," contained 676 names. Those facts disclose the enormity of the offense committed against honest registration in this district. The law absolutely requires that the name of every registered voter shall appear upon the printed lists published by the election commissioners.

After that time, when those lists are required to be printed, it is absolutely impossible for any name to be honestly added to the list, except of those who may have previously attempted to register and from the striking off of whose names appeals were taken by them to the board of election commissioners. The testimony of Mr. Aloe, one of the election commissioners, is to the effect that in the whole city of St. Louis there were not more than 40 of such appeals. Yet in this precinct the printed registration lists show only 169, while it is now made to appear that in the election commissioners' office there was a list of 676 registered persons.

The same state of affairs to a greater or less degree appears throughout most of the contested precincts. In this case it certainly could not have been the result of accident, and is explainable only upon one of two theories. First, that the registration list was illegally padded after the printed lists were made public, or else that the printed lists designedly omitted the greater portion of the names which had been registered so as to render impossible, or at least unlikely, the detection of false registration.

The poll book (p. 453) shows 416 persons to have voted in this precinct. The opening of the ballot box (p. 792) discloses 407 ballots.

Of these, 347 (including 14 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 350. Wagoner had 51 ballots in the box. The returns give him 6.

Thirty-six persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list.

Fourteen persons voted twice for Mr. Butler upon the same names and numbers.

There were missing from the box the ballots of 27 persons, who, according to the poll books, appeared and voted.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 6.

According to the poll book (p. 347), 163 persons appeared and voted in Ward 4, precinct 6. The opening of the ballot box (p. 790) discloses 185 ballots therein.

Of these, 122 (including two duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 130. Twenty-nine votes were cast whose names were not on the printed registration list.

Fifty-nine ballots bore the initials of but one judge, the law requiring two.

Two persons voted twice on the same names and numbers.

There were missing from the box the ballots of 12 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 4.

According to the poll book (p. 450), there appeared and voted 263 persons. The opening of the ballot box (p. 786) disclosed exactly 263 ballots therein, of which number 193 (including 17 duplications) bore the name of Butler; the returns, however, gave him 204 and Wagoner 65, making a total of 269, or 6 ballots more than there were in the box.

Nine persons voted twice upon the same names and numbers, and 8 others voted twice upon the same names and addresses, but upon different numbers.

There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 7 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

Thirty-eight persons voted whose names were not upon the printed registration lists; 2 ballots cast for Butler were not numbered, 7 bore the initials of but one judge, the law requiring two.

In this case, again, we have three instances of large bodies arriving at the registration office in alphabetical order. From 619 Morgan street, 16 persons arriving at the place of registration in alphabetical order, the B's getting there first and the other letters in proper order. But in the case of the 48 who made the race from 823 North Sixth street the W's got there first, followed in proper order by all the others, the A's being last, as was the case with 24 from 801 North Sixth street. All those who voted from the three numbers above mentioned voted for Butler, save Charles Baker, from 801 North Sixth street; but that defection was balanced by John Clark, from 803 North Sixth street, who voted twice for Butler.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 3.

The poll book (p. 446) shows 278 persons to have voted in Ward 4, precinct 3. The opening of the ballot box (p. 784) disclosed 264 ballots in the box.

Of this number, 216 (including 18 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 215. Eighty-three persons voted whose names were not upon the printed registration list.

Eighteen persons voted twice upon the same names and numbers.

There were missing from the box the ballots of 35 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

The entire 55 voters from North Seventh street reached the place of registration in alphabetical order, although living in different houses. So far as they voted at all they voted for Butler.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 7.

According to the poll book (p. 475) 287 persons appeared and voted in Ward 5, precinct 7. The opening of the ballot box (p. 658) disclosed 318 ballots therein. Of this number, 218 (including 10 duplications) bore Butler's name. Although the duplications were included in the 218, the return judges appeared to have added them again, as the returns show 228.

Thirty-six persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list.

Eighteen persons voted twice for Butler on the same names and numbers.

Twenty-eight ballots cast for Butler and 3 for Wagoner were not initialed as according to law; 20 ballots bore the initials of one judge, while the law requires two; 8 bore no initials at all.

Thirty-six ballots were missing from the box of persons shown by the poll book to have appeared and voted.

In this precinct 33 persons registering from 5 North Ninth street reached the place of registration in precise reversed alphabetical order, and so far as they voted all voted for Butler, some of them more than once.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 2.

The poll book (p. 440) shows 488 persons to have appeared and voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 780) disclosed 486 ballots therein. Of this number 472 (including 45 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns gave him 471. Wagoner had 14 ballots in the box. The returns give him 17. Three hundred and thirty-two persons voted in this precinct whose names were not on the printed registration list. Forty-five persons voted twice upon the same names and numbers. There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 48 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted.

The fact that 31 persons, mostly Irish, registered from one building, 1038 Third street, in this precinct, arrived at the place of registration in reverse alphabetical order is not more remarkable than that 39 others, mostly Italians, registering from 615 Franklin avenue, by a singular coincidence, arrived in precisely the same order. Assuming that each one of these persons did appear personally for registration, as the law requires, these coincidences would be remarkable, but upon the not very violent assumption that if there were such persons actually in existence, which may be fairly doubted, their names were handed by designing persons to registration officers anxious to assist in false registration for the purposes of the election, the case is not unusual. It is perhaps not singular that every vote cast from the two houses above named were cast for Butler.

WARD 23, PRECINCT 12.

According to the poll book (p. 432) 247 persons appeared and voted in Ward 23, precinct 12. The opening of the ballot box (p. 821) disclosed 388 ballots therein. Two hundred and seventy-six of these (including 29 duplications) bore Butler's name. The returns give him 287. Wagoner had 55. The returns give him 53. Ninety-five persons voted whose names were not on the printed registration list. Twenty-nine voted twice upon the same names and numbers. There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 54 persons who, according to the poll book, appeared and voted, while there appeared in the ballot box 94 ballots for Butler bearing numbers not entered in the poll book at all.

These ballots were numbered as follows: 248, 249, 250, 2 numbered 252, 2 numbered 253, 2 numbered 254, 2 numbered 255, 256, 257, 259, 260, 261, 2 numbered 262, 263, 2 numbered 265, 267, 269, 270, 271, 273, 2 numbered 275, 280, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 2 numbered 296, 2 numbered 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 2 numbered 308, 309, 311, 2 numbered 312, 329, 330, 3 numbered 335, 336, 339, 2 numbered 340, 341, 348, 2 numbered 349, 350, 353, 355, 356, 357, 361, 362, 367, 369, 383, 386, 389, 2 numbered 390, 2 numbered 391, 395, 396, 2 numbered 398, 400, 401, 2 numbered 402, 407, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, and 415. There were found in the box 13 ballots for Wagoner on numbers not appearing in the poll book.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 6.

The poll book (p. 516) records 253 persons as having appeared and voted in Ward 5, precinct 6. The opening of the ballot box (p. 757) disclosed 252 ballots in the box. Of this number, however, 11 were duplicates. No. 52 voted once for Wagoner and once for Butler; No. 54 twice for Butler; No. 88 twice for Butler; No. 199 twice for Butler; No. 231 twice for Butler; No. 235 once for Butler and once for Wagoner; No. 245 twice for Butler; No. 250 twice for Butler; No. 135 once for Butler and once for Wagoner; No. 148 twice for Butler; No. 168 once for Butler and once for Wagoner.

There were missing from the ballot box 16 ballots of persons who were entered on the poll book as having appeared and voted. Thirty-five ballots were cast by persons whose names do not appear on the printed registration list. There is abundant evidence that the return from this precinct is wholly unreliable. As bearing upon that fact, it may be noted that 30 persons were registered from 815 Walnut street; that every person who voted from that house cast his ballot for Butler is not so remarkable as that upon appearing for registration they appear to have arrived in alphabetical order.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 1.

The poll book (p. 473) shows 154 persons to have appeared and voted in Ward 5, precinct 1. The opening of the ballot box (p. 806) disclosed 154 ballots in the box. The judges in their return accounted for just 154 ballots, although in doing so they gave 14 to Artz, whose name appeared upon only 2 ballots in the box. There were missing from the box the ballots of 6 persons whose names appeared on the poll book as having voted. Ballot No. 4 was voted twice for Butler; No. 97 once for Butler and once for nobody; No. 109 twice for Butler; No. 111 once for Butler and once for Wagoner; No. 118 once for Wagoner and once for nobody. Twenty-eight persons voted in this precinct whose names were not upon the printed registration list.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 9.

According to the poll book (p. 319) 223 persons appeared and voted in Ward 5, precinct 9. The opening of the ballot box (p. 660) disclosed 213 ballots in the box. The judges returned 223, viz, 145 for Butler, 71 for Wagoner, and 7 for Artz. It is worthy of remark that in returning 10 ballots more than were found in the box the judges nevertheless made their return to correspond, so far as numbers were concerned, precisely with the poll book, although 5 ballots found in the box bore nobody's name for Congress for the short term and 5 others were duplicated, viz, ballot No. 16, once for Wagoner and once for nobody; Nos. 24, 41, 84, and 207 were each voted twice for Butler, while there are entirely missing from the ballot box the ballots of 20 persons whose names appeared on the poll book. Thirty-two persons voted in this precinct whose names do not appear on the printed registration list.

WARD 22, PRECINCT 13.

The poll book (p. 429) gives the names and addresses of 228 persons who appeared and voted in Ward 22, precinct 13. The opening of the ballot box (p. 641) disclosed 227 ballots therein. Of this number, 97 (including duplications) bore the name of Butler, but the return gives him 115. The return accounts for 233 votes—6 more than were in the box. Of those in the box, No. 10 was voted once for Butler and once for Wagoner; No. 20, once for Wagoner and once for nobody; No. 21, once for Wagoner and once for Butler; No. 107, twice for Wagoner; No. 141, twice for Butler; No. 156, once for Butler and once for nobody; No. 213 was voted three times for Butler. There were missing from the box the ballots of 13 persons whose names appear on the poll book as having appeared and voted. Seventeen persons voted in this precinct whose names do not appear on the printed registration list.

WARD 23, PRECINCT 3.

The poll book (p. 379) shows the names of 253 persons who appeared and voted in Ward 23, precinct 3. The ballot box (p. 670) contained 251 ballots, divided as follows: Butler, 184; Wagoner, 56; Artz, 2; voted for nobody for Congress, 9. The judges returned 202 for Butler, 51 for Wagoner, and none for Artz. They accounted for 2 more ballots than there were in the box, although 5 of those in the box were duplicates, No 34 having voted twice for Butler, No. 55 once for Butler and once for nobody, No. 118 once for Butler and once for Wagoner, No. 136 once for Reynolds and once for Wagoner, and No. 192 once for Butler and once for Wagoner.

The judges, it will be noted, returned just as many votes as there were names on the poll book, notwithstanding the duplication noted and notwithstanding the fact that there were no ballots in the box to correspond with the numbers of 5 persons whom the poll book shows to have voted. Sixty-one persons voted in this precinct whose names do not appear on the printed registration list.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 5.

The poll book (p. 422) gives the names and addresses of 231 persons who appeared and voted in Ward 5, precinct 5. The opening of the ballot box (p. 754) showed 229 ballots. No. 384 appeared three times for Butler and Nos. 129 and 190 each twice for Butler. Including these two duplications and one triplication 188 ballots bore the name of Butler. The judges returned 192 in his favor, and deducting 2 from the actual ballots cast for Wagoner, gave him 30.

It is peculiarly noticeable that the poll book, which is required to be kept in duplicate, shows curious results, Nos. 28 to 60, both inclusive, registering entirely different in the two copies of the poll book (p. 423). Thus, in one book the twenty-eighth person who voted was Charles J. Carey, while in the other book No. 28 was J. P. O'Hara. No. 48 in one book was R. O'Day, while in the duplicate poll book F. McCarthy appears to have been the forty-eighth man to vote. No. 38 in one book was Joseph Toomey, while in the duplicate book O. Woods responded to that number.

The registration list of this precinct shows 40 names registered from 509 Spruce street, a goodly number to register from one house. Moreover, they are registered in alphabetical order. What is still more remarkable, this alphabetical arrangement is reversed, so that the names read alphabetically upward instead of downward. The law of Missouri requires that an intending voter must appear in person for the purpose of registration. If the same conditions were not observed in other districts it might be considered remarkable that 40 men, all from the same house, should appear and register in the precise order in which their initial letters appear in the alphabet reversed, so as to run from W to B instead of from B to W.

The frequent recurrence of such instances, coupled with other facts known as to the lack of integrity in these registration proceedings, gives moral certainty to the proposition that instead of appearing for registration these 40 real or mythical persons were represented by some kind friend who merely handed their names on a slip of paper to the amiable person in charge of the registration, arranging them alphabetically for purposes of greater convenience in subsequent proceedings. Nearly every one of these 40 persons thus registered in backward alphabetical order appeared upon election day and voted. Whether or not they voted early does not appear, but they certainly voted often; at least more than once.

The poll book shows one vote to have been cast by John Bernard and another by J. Bernard; one by P. Douglas and another by Peter Douglas; one by James Clark and another by J. Clark; one by Thomas Williams and another by T. Williams; one by Ed Ryan and another by E. Ryan; one by F. McCarthy and another by Frank McCarthy. With so many instances of similarity of names of persons appearing and voting from the same house does not appear to have attracted the attention of the election officers of this precinct. Nor does it seem to have interested them that J. Toomey should vote from 509 Spruce and Joseph Toomey from the adjoining house, 507.

It must have pleased these election officers to note that, notwithstanding the factional differences elsewhere, the alphabetically registered voters with entire unanimity cast their votes for Mr. Butler. Many other singular coincidences in connection with this precinct would have led less suspecting persons than these innocent election officers to the irresistible conclusion that the entire registration proceedings was a fraud and a swindle, intended to help the manifest repeating and false personation in progress at the election.

WARD 15, PRECINCT 1.

The poll book (p. 418) shows that 138 persons appeared and voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 811) disclosed 178 ballots therein. Not one of these ballots was numbered as required by law, and it was therefore impossible, by comparison with the poll book or by any other means, to tell what ones, if any of them, had been deposited by persons entitled to vote, or what ones, if any, had voted more than once upon the same name and number.

Although there was 131 ballots in the box bearing the name of Mr. Butler, the returns for some reason give him 106 and Mr. Wagoner 41. The absence of numbers from the ballots is not only of itself illegal but presumptive evidence of further frauds, which is accentuated by the finding in the ballot box of so many more ballots than the poll books show of persons to have voted.

To what extent other frauds were perpetrated in this precinct the absence of numbers from the ballots renders it impossible to determine.

WARD 24, PRECINCT 12.

The poll book (p. 549) showed 387 persons to have voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 767) disclosed 386 ballots therein. Twenty-four of these ballots were not voted for anybody for Congress for the short term. Fourteen ballots were duplicates, the same persons voting twice upon the same name and number. Two hundred and seven ballots bore Butler's name. Thirty-five persons voted whose names are not on the printed registration list. The returns gave Butler 198. One hundred and fifty ballots bore Wagoner's name. The returns reduced him to 100.

WARD 4, PRECINCT 5.

According to the poll book (p. 312) 355 persons appeared and voted. The opening of the ballot box (p. 788) disclosed 322 ballots therein. Of this number, 290 (including 14 duplications) bore Butler's name. The charitably disposed election officers returned 324 for him and 24 for Wagoner, or a total of 348, being 26 more ballots than there were in the box.

Sixty-seven persons voted in this precinct whose names were not on the printed registration lists.

There were two ballots numbered "10," one for Butler and one for Wagoner. Ballots numbered 40, 60, 114, 165, 251, 263, 294, 326, 331, 337, 348, 27, and 245, for Butler, were duplicated in the box.

There were missing from the ballot box the ballots of 101 persons whose names were entered in the poll book as having appeared and voted.

WARD 5, PRECINCT 3.

The poll book gives the names of 305 persons who appeared and voted. Three hundred and two ballots were found in the box.

Of this number, 237 (including 22 duplications) bore Butler's name; the returns gave him 224, Wagoner 69, and Artz 2. The box contained two ballots numbered 19, both for Butler; two ballots numbered 27, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 28, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; four ballots numbered 32, three for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 72, both for Butler; two numbered 68, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 124, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 138, both for Butler; two numbered 148, both for Butler; two numbered 163, both for Butler; four numbered 171, three times for Butler and one for Wagoner; three numbered 177, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 187, twice for Butler; two numbered 188, one for Butler and one for Wagoner; two numbered 204, twice for Butler; two numbered 218, twice for Butler; two numbered 250, twice for Butler; two numbered 283, twice for Butler; two numbered 285, twice for Butler; three numbered 287, one for Butler and two for Wagoner; two numbered 290, twice for Butler.

Thirty-seven ballots were missing from the box of persons whose names were entered on the poll book as having appeared and voted.

There was such manifest fraud and gross irregularity in each one of these 41 precincts that it is absolutely impossible to ascertain what votes, if any, were honestly cast or honestly counted. We therefore reject these 41 returns entirely.

PRECINCTS NOT DISTURBED.

Some of your committee think that, in view of the evidence of general fraud permeating the entire election system, the entire vote in the 63 contested precincts should be thrown out, but there are a number of precincts in which, although there are manifest irregularities, nevertheless they would not, standing by themselves, warrant the throwing out of the entire precinct without a more thorough analysis of the testimony than is possible under the resolution requiring your committee to report in time for the disposition of this case before the adjournment of the present Congress.

We have concluded, therefore, not to disturb the returns from the following precincts, viz:

Ward 5, precinct 9; Ward 5, precinct 10; Ward 6, precinct 1; Ward 13, precinct 6; Ward 13, precinct 7; Ward 13, precinct 12; Ward 14, precinct 1; Ward 14, precinct 3; Ward 14, precinct 5; Ward 14, precinct 7; Ward 14, precinct 9; Ward 15, precinct 9; Ward 15, precinct 11; Ward 22, precinct 3; Ward 23, precinct 1; Ward 23, precinct 2; Ward 23, precinct 6; Ward 23, precinct 7; Ward 24, precinct 1; Ward 24, precinct 11; Ward 24, precinct 13; Ward 25, precinct 1.

With the exception of precinct 9 of Ward 14, which gave contestant a plurality of 15, all those precincts gave majorities for Mr. Butler. If anybody is injured by our lack of time to further consider and analyze the results in these undisturbed precincts, it is the contestant. Certainly the contestee can not complain.

The following is a summary of the precincts thrown out, and the vote in each:

Ward.	Precinct.	Votes for Butler.	Votes for Wagoner.

Your committee has no hesitation in reporting that Mr. Wagoner was fairly elected and is entitled to his seat, and therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolutions, viz:

"Resolved, That James J. Butler was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That George C. R. Wagoner was elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein."

M. E. OLMSTED, Chairman.
J. M. MILLER.
F. D. CURRIER.
JOHN W. DWIGHT.
GEO. SUTHERLAND.

During the reading of the report the following occurred:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is a very important case and involves a very important question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is important that we should hear the report and I think we ought to have a quorum of the House present. The point of order that I make is that there is not a quorum of the House present to transact business; that this consideration of this report is a part of the business of the House; that it is an important report, one which is not printed and which the House should understand, and I think a quorum should be present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. That is sufficient. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-five present, not a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, who moves a call of the House.

The question was taken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 106, noes 27.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams,	Davis, Fla.	Kyle,	Ruppert,

The SPEAKER. On the roll call 195 members have responded to their names, so that a quorum is present. The doors will be opened by the officers of the House, and the reading will proceed.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the report.

Mr. FEELY (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with, and that the minority of the committee have until after the adjournment to-morrow evening to present their views, and that an agreement be made not to call up this case for disposal until after to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report, and that the minority have until after the adjournment to-morrow night to file the views of the minority, with the understanding that the case will not be called up until such views are filed, after to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I shall certainly object unless there is coupled with that the understanding that the entire report, which has now been partially read, shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FEELY. There is no objection to that.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to state——

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair submit these things in their proper order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, reserving the objection——

The SPEAKER. Pending that——

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois desires, when he files the views of the minority to-morrow, that they be printed in the RECORD on the following morning, so that if the case is called up thereafter we shall have the views of both the majority and minority.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to state, Mr. Speaker, that this case was not called up for consideration. I simply, by direction of the committee, presented the report in order that it might be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We had our understanding also, and if the gentleman desires to make any statement we desire also to make a statement. We have come to this agreement, and if we are going to stand by it we had better do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request as stated by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to make a statement, reserving my objection. I was unable to hear exactly what the gentleman from Tennessee said. I want to say I stated, before this report was presented, to the gentleman from Illinois that so far as I was concerned or could control it there might be permission that the minority report might be filed at any time before adjournment to-morrow, and that I did not expect to call up the case to-morrow and should not unless forced by some order of business which I could not foresee. It was not my intention to call it up to-morrow, and therefore I hope there will be no objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I desire to state I requested the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the minority might be allowed to file their views by to-morrow night, and further urged an agreement that the case should not be called up to-morrow, which latter he said he could not make.

Mr. OLMSTED. Although I did state it was not my intention to call it up. One more suggestion. If I correctly understand the gentleman from Illinois, his request was that the case should not be called up until the minority report had been filed. I understand that he means by that that it will not be called up to-morrow, and that the report will be presented to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding in the case.

Mr. OLMSTED. With that understanding——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And be printed in the RECORD the next morning.

The SPEAKER. And with the right to print it in the RECORD of the next day.

Mr. OLMSTED. With that understanding, I trust the request will be granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL submitted the following report and statement of the conferees on the Army appropriation bill, to be printed in the RECORD under the rule:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 23, 27, 28, 33, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, and 46.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 40, 42, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "appointed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisted;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 6 and 7 of said amendment strike out the following: "as military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following proviso: "Provided, That all volunteer officers now in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment shall be mustered out on June 30, 1904, and their places be filled by detail from the line of the Army: Provided further, That any vacancy now existing or which may occur between now and June 30, 1904, shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive, of said amendment, and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That not more than $40,000 of the above appropriation shall be expended at any one post or station;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen," and after the word "million," in line 20, page 29 of the bill, insert the words "five hundred thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Your committee of conference report a disagreement on amendment numbered 3.

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the bill making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, make the following statement:

Amendments Nos. 1 and 2 refer to the chief of staff, and are made necessary by the bill for the reorganization of the Army.

Amendment No. 4 applies only to the purchase of newspapers by the military information division, and is in line with the legislation enacted by the House.

Amendment No. 5 makes the same provision for equipment of the Signal Corps, now applying to other officers, to waive advertisement for small purchases.

Amendment No. 6 simply corrects a mistake.

Amendments Nos. 7 and 8 simply change the language without changing the intent.

Amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, and 13 simply refer to the chief of staff, and are made necessary by the legislation passed creating a general staff corps.

Amendments Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 refer to the Signal Corps.

Amendment No. 21 extends the provision as to double service for war service to those that served in China now accorded to those who served in Porto Rico, Cuba, and Philippine Islands.

Amendment No. 22 refers to soldiers' deposits and is simply a verbal change.

Amendment No. 24 gives mileage to contract surgeons same as other officers.

Amendment No. 25 simply makes a verbal change

Amendment No. 26 increases pay of the computer for the Artillery Board $500 per annum.

Amendment No. 29 refers to the abolition of the Porto Rico Regiment.

Amendment No. 31 is simply a verbal change.

Amendment No. 32 places in the discretion of the Secretary of War where ice to enlisted men should be furnished.

Amendment No. 34 refers to office furniture, etc., for the use of officers' schools at the several military posts.

Amendment No. 35 makes provision for the sale of horses owned by officers to the Government when the officer is ordered to duty beyond the seas.

Amendment No. 36 makes immediately available $2,000,000 out of the appropriation for barracks and quarters.

Amendment No. 37 makes immediately available the appropriation for the purchase of additional ground in Omaha.

Amendment No. 40 makes the amount immediately available.

Amendment No. 42 increases the amount for clothing and garrison equipage $750,000.

Amendment No. 47 refers to the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers.

Amendment No. 48 relates to furnishing national trophy and medals for the Regular Army and the National Guard for expert rifle shooting, and also an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the militia of the States.

Amendment No. 49 refers to purchases by the Ordnance Department, and requires them to be reported to the Secretary of War.

Amendments Nos. 50, 51, 52, and 53 relate to change in the law governing the detail of officers for the Ordnance Department.

In all the foregoing amendments the House recedes from its disagreements.

Amendment No. 20 relates to the advancement of certain officers of the Army to an additional grade.

Amendment No. 23 extends the provision for deposit with the Government to officers of the Army.

Amendment No. 27 relates to injuries at Fort H. G. Wright, N. Y.

Amendment No. 28 relates to damages at Fort Preble, Me., and other places.

Amendment No. 33 increases the appropriation for regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department $500,000.

Amendment No. 39 increases appropriations for barracks and quarters in Philippine Islands, $250,000.

Amendment No. 40 makes the amount immediately available.

Amendment No. 43 relates to the purchase and preservation of the battlefield at Balls Bluff.

Amendments Nos. 44, 45, and 46 relate to the payment of medical expenses of soldiers on furlough after the 21st of April, 1898.

From all of which amendments the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9 relates to master electricians, and the House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the same with the amendment striking out the word "appointed" and inserting the word "enlisted."

Amendment No. 19 relates to the detail of retired officers as military attachés and for service in connection with the organized militia of the States and Territories. The House recedes from its disagreements and agrees to the amendment with an amendment striking out all relating to the service of retired officers at embassies and legations abroad, and confining their services to this country with the organized militia of the States and Territories upon request of the governors.

Amendment No. 30 makes provision for the continuance of the Porto Rican

Regiment of Infantry, and the House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the Senate amendment with an amendment providing that all volunteer officers now in the regiment shall be mustered out on the 30th of June, 1904, so as to extend the present organization another year.

Amendment No. 38 appropriates money to purchase heavy furniture for permanent officers' quarters, for the payment of special assessment against the military reservation at Indianapolis, Ind., and an appropriation for the continuance of the construction and maintenance of post exchanges. The House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the amendment with an amendment eliminating all appropriations for heavy furniture and for the payment of a special assessment at Indianapolis, Ind., and agrees to $500,000 for post exchanges with an additional proviso limiting the appropriation for post exchanges to $40,000 for one post or station.

Amendment No. 41: The Senate amendment appropriated $16,000,000 for the transportation of the Army and supplies, and the conferees agreed to $15,500,000.

On amendment No. 3, which provides for purchase of Heitman manuscript, the conferees report a disagreement.

ASSET CURRENCY.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16228.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the national-bank bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 39.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-three present—not a quorum. The officers will close the doors of the House and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of going into Committee of the Whole will vote "yea;" those opposed will vote "nay." Those present not wishing to vote will answer "present."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 58, answered "present" 20, not voting 137; as follows:

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15228) providing for the issue and circulation of national-bank notes, with Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15228, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] has thirty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, section 9 of the proposed bill reads as follows:

SEC. 9. That the bank notes taken out for issue in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be redeemed on demand in gold coin over the counter of the bank issuing them, and if said bank is located outside of one of the redemption cities hereinafter established it shall then select a national bank as its agent in a redemption city, subject to the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, which shall upon demand redeem said notes in gold coin.

Thus it appears that there is a provision made for the redemption of these notes when issued. They are to be redeemed in gold over the counters of the banks issuing them, or at a bank selected in the redemption city where, when the notes of the issue bank are presented, they will be paid or redeemed in gold coin. In other words, these notes become what are regarded as convertible notes into coin. We are now in this country on a single gold standard. Our standard is gold. The other money is kept at a parity with gold. The burden is now placed upon the Government to maintain at a parity all of its money, silver as well as the Treasury notes and certificates at a parity with gold. The burden entails upon the Government the necessity of keeping $150,000,000 in gold in the Treasury, so as to meet any notes that may come and exchange them for gold. This bill, if enacted into law, will cast largely the burden upon the banks to get the gold themselves and have it in readiness to convert their own issues into gold when required. The result will be that less gold will be required by the Government to meet the demands of commerce and of trade, and the burden will be cast on the banks to meet these requirements.

In addition to that it will give to us a form of currency which is equal to gold, and I might say that the students of finance look upon it as one of the best kinds of currency that it is possible for the country to have. As it is now, we are confined largely, if we desire to increase our currency, either to the coinage of gold or the issuing of national-bank notes. We have stopped the coinage of silver; we are limited so far as the number of greenbacks are concerned to the issue of three hundred and forty-six millions. Our Treasury notes are being redeemed. I well remember when I came to Congress and was placed upon the Banking and Currency Committee, the Treasury notes amounted to $90,000,000. I think there are now less than thirty millions—twenty-four millions in round numbers.

These have been gradually redeemed and taken out of circulation; and the public has hardly realized that there has been such a diminution, so far as the volume of currency is concerned. We have enlarged our subsidiary coinage to the extent of some millions. The national-bank circulation has been enlarged about $126,000,000 within the last six or seven years. So that the sources by which the volume of money in the country can be added to are largely two only: One is the getting of gold, either from the mines and coining it, or from customs dues; the other is by increasing the national-bank note circulation.

According to my recollection, we have added to the volume of our gold currency since 1896 about $600,000,000. That is, in round numbers, the sum which has been added to the volume of gold in this country within the last six years—$100,000,000 a year. Then we have added about $126,000,000 to the volume of currency by reason of the increased circulation of national-bank notes. You might ask me, "Why will not the national banks continue to increase the volume of currency in this country?" The answer is apparent: The banks, in order to issue circulation, must purchase bonds, which cost too much to make the business profitable. The bonds of the Government are at a premium. Some bonds sell for 114, and they sell at various higher figures, some as high as 136.5. That is to say, if you wanted to issue $100 of currency, you would have to put up $136 in order to purchase the necessary bonds, and on the currency thus obtained you would not realize enough money as interest to warrant the issue of circulation based upon those bonds. If you should resort to cheaper bonds, they would cost $108 for each $100 bond. In other words, in order to issue circulation to the amount of $100,000 you would have to buy bonds that would cost from $108,000 to $136,000.

Now, how much do the national banks make upon their circulation, as shown by the statement of the actuary of the Treasury Department? I have heard it stated that the profit is in the neighborhood of three-fourths of 1 per cent. You may ask, Will they go into this field for the purpose of making only that small amount of money? Yes; measurably so. Why? Because when people have notes or bills to collect, or drafts to send out upon people in the West or the East or the South, the very first thing they look at is their bank directories, and a bank may do considerable business in the way of exchange and commerce by reason of the fact merely that it is "the First National Bank," or "the Second National Bank." People may do business with such a bank by reason of its name, when perhaps they might not do it with another bank; in other words, there may be collaterally some benefit from a bank being called "the First National Bank" or "the Second National Bank." In the way of loans, however, it does not pay a bank to secure circulation by the purchase of bonds in order to engage in this business.

Then the bonds, being at so high a premium, become matters of speculation; and when this great Government of ours, having available cash to the amount of $220,000,000, wants to call in some of its bonds and pay out the currency, our friends who hold the bonds cease to think of patriotism, and they demand the full limit from those who want to buy bonds, and we have to pay, as the Secretary of the Treasury did within the last year or two, enormous sums in the shape of premium in order to get the bonds and put the money out in the hands of the people.

For more than forty years, during which the national banks have been in existence, the men who have held the bonds of the Government have been reaping profits at the expense of the people. The time has now come when it seems to me we should legislate along lines which will be for the benefit of the people and not in the interest of the men who hold the bonds.

How can the necessary change be brought about? We can issue this currency based to the extent of 25 per cent upon assets. The Secretary of the Treasury has declared in his public report that such a currency will be sound, that it can pass into universal circulation and will be redeemable over the counters of the banks in gold, the standard of value of the country in which we live. Not only will this currency be redeemable over the counter of the bank issuing it, but, besides, there is this touchstone—its redemption in the redemption cities of the country, so that the money goes back to the bank issuing it and is there redeemed. As I understand the statements of gentlemen who have investigated this question, within seventy or ninety days these notes will come home to the bank that issued them for redemption.

One gentleman on the other side has said that these banks, if they have this form of currency, will make some money. That is true; I concede it. They will make perhaps 3 per cent. They are making now less than 1 per cent. Suppose the banks do make 3 per cent. This will encourage the banks to issue this kind of notes. Then what will be the effect of it? The rate of interest will be brought down, there will be a uniform rate of interest throughout the United States, there will be a lower rate of interest, and the bonds will come down in value, because they will cease to be of special character for the purpose of basing bank notes upon, and they will then be like other bonds in the country, governed by their actual value instead of their speculative value. No harm will come to the people.

I remember distinctly how it was stated by some gentleman on the other side that if we went to a single gold standard on March 4, 1900, gold would go higher, that interest rates would increase, that there was not enough gold in the country to meet the demand, that the world had gone to a single gold standard, and that there would be a shrinkage in value, and a financial crash, and destruction would come to this people. Nearly three years have gone by since that law was enacted in this House. The country has a redundance of credit and has a large amount of deposits. We have been moving along at a tremendous rate. Using the language of my distinguished colleague, Mr. CANNON, when he speaks upon this floor, we have been going along by "leaps and bounds." We have added six hundred millions of dollars of gold to the volume of our currency in the last six years. Interest is at a lower rate than it ever has been in the history of the country.

Prosperity is everywhere, but there is need in addition to that for this class of currency. It is perfectly safe and perfectly reliable. But you may say to me in answer, perhaps, to the suggestions I have made, or at least those which may run in your minds, if we have added $600,000,000 of gold; if we have added $126,000,000 of national-bank notes; if we have added in the neighborhood of $700,000,000 of money since 1897 to the volume of money in this country, is not that ample to meet the volume of trade? Is not that ample to meet the increase of population in this country? Is not that ample to do the business of this country?

In a measure, I may say, yes; and in another sense I say, decidedly, no. We have increased the amount of our deposits. The amount has trebled. It required, in round numbers, in 1896, less than $400,000,000 in the reserve, as required by the national-bank act. To-day it requires nearly $800,000,000 in the reserve to meet the demands of the law in that respect. A large share of the volume of money that has been added in this country since 1896 has been required to meet the demands of depositors under the law in the reserve banks of the United States.

We have grown in volume, and I see it is stated currently in the papers that the internal trade of this great Republic of ours is $20,000,000,000. Think of it! The great free trade that flows back and forth from Maine to California and from the Lakes on the north to the Gulf on the south represents the enormous sum of $20,000,000,000—more than all the trade, perhaps, that crosses the ocean in all the international trade of the world. This great Government of ours, with its millions of people, with its great States and with its great interests, has a circulating trade of $20,000,000,000, and yet we have not increased the tools we need for the purpose of transacting the business of the country. Here is a means of doing this, and it is moving, as has been stated by others before me, along the lines of scientific financial progress. Let me read to you one statement:

> Redeemable bank notes are the printed promises of a bank to pay coin of the standard metal on demand to the full face value of the notes. Where such promises are always scrupulously fulfilled, without cost or difficulty for the holder of the notes, and with ample provision for the full payment of the notes in case of the failure of the bank, the redeemable bank note constitutes the most effective auxiliary of coins of the standard metal for carrying on business. It is a form of credit by which the use of coin is economized in the same manner as by the use of checks, deposit accounts, and clearing-house settlements.

Think of the billions of trade in this country. Think of the abrasion and loss to the gold itself by the handling of it in this country. Here is a better way of handling this great problem. Here is a better way for putting the burden of the handling and redeeming of these notes, not on the Government of the United States, where, when they want to export gold, they can come to the vaults of the United States and get it through the old endless-chain system as they used to do. What are we coming to in effect? We are coming to this, and this is the line upon which I am seeking to move in this bill. We have adopted a single gold standard. We have stopped the further coinage of silver. We are not going to issue any more notes in the form of fiat money like the greenback notes we have in this country. We have been calling in the Treasury notes of the United States, and they soon will be gone.

The national banks will not continue to enlarge their circulation, because it does not pay. Then, what are we coming to? We are coming, then, to a single gold standard, and no other way to enlarge the volume of money in this country except as we proceed along the lines of a currency of this kind, based upon the assets of the banks, and these assets are good. They are reliable, and then the notes, when issued, are redeemable over their own counters in coin. It makes them absolutely as good as gold, and they are gold-bearing notes. Do other countries do what we are seeking to do by this bill?

The issue of redeemable bank notes has been restricted in most European countries by recent laws to a single institution with large capital, like the Bank of France, the Imperial Bank of Germany, the Bank of England, the Bank of Russia, and the Austro-Hungarian Bank; but the power of issue is distributed among a plurality of smaller institutions in Scotland, Switzerland, Canada, and the United States.

Mr. Conant in his article says this:

The ideal currency system, from the standpoint of most scientific students of the subject, is that which combines the single metallic standard with the issue of convertible bank notes. Under such a system, where the standard metal is coined freely and without charge, or with only a nominal charge, upon deposit of the bullion at the mints by any holder of it, the metallic currency of the country is responsive to the influences of the demand for standard metal throughout the world. The money of the standard metal comes and goes according to the state of prices and the rates of interest for capital.

That, in brief, is what we are seeking to do by this legislation, and I am pleased to say that I find my friends upon the other side in their minority report agreeing with the ideas that we seek to convey in this measure.

I have watched with pleasure the tendency of the two sides of this Chamber to get together on great questions. When I first came to this body it took two or three days to discuss the ordinary pension appropriation bill. I remember a great many nights that we used to put in in trying to pass private pension bills. It was a great struggle to get anything done that looked toward pension legislation, special or general. I remember how the giants on each side of this House contended over political questions. But finally I saw a change come over this House. It was on the 8th of March, 1898. I was sitting in my seat. The House was fairly well crowded on that day. I saw my distinguished colleague [Mr. CANNON], soon to be the Speaker of this House [applause], when he came in from his room and addressed the then Speaker of the House, to ask in timely and well-chosen words for the present consideration of an appropriation measure. He asked the House at that time to place in the hands of one man, President McKinley, without ever asking that man to report by vouchers or otherwise to Congress, the sum of $50,000,000 to prepare for the war with Spain.

When he had ceased speaking, I looked upon the other side of this Chamber to see what, if anything, would be done with reference to that measure. I saw a very distinguished man, Mr. Sayers, of Texas, whose hair was iron gray, who showed some of the marks of age, who had been a very distinguished leader in the Confederate cause in that great fratricidal contest between our people. As that big-brained, splendid man rose in his seat, he addressed the Speaker in well-timed words, asking that that measure be passed, and said that he spoke for his side of the House in giving the assurance that there would be no opposition.

I thought perhaps that was the end of it; but I turned in my seat and looked at a distinguished leader on this side of the Chamber, Mr. GROSVENOR, of Ohio, a man who had fought and won his spurs upon the field of battle, who had won distinction fighting against the other distinguished gentleman in the war from 1861 to 1865. His hair was white. His beard was long and flowing, and as he turned and looked at the gentlemen on the other side, he said: "Thank God I have lived to see this day. I have contended with you gentlemen here in this forum, and with some of you I have contended upon the field of battle. But, thank God, thy servant, like Samuel of old, is ready to depart in peace, for he has seen his country come together, and we have one President, one country, one flag." [Applause.]

From that day to this, Mr. Chairman, I have seen the coming together of these forces. I have seen them come together until it takes only ten or twenty minutes now to pass the pension appropriation bill. I have seen my friend the distinguished leader from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] rise here in his seat and in one short afternoon pass 325 pension bills, and my good friend and colleague the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] as fast as his tongue could rattle off the words would announce their favorable consideration, which would be approved by the House and they would become, so far as this House was concerned, the law of the land.

I have seen the military bill of this House discussed for hours and hours along the Philippine policy, but that is now a thing of the past, and the chairman of the committee [Mr. HULL] can, within ten or twenty minutes, pass the military appropriation bill through this House, appropriating from seventy to ninety million dollars, without any opposition on the part of anyone in this body.

So I might go on and enumerate how these forces have been coming together. And it is a splendid thing, because we, my fellow-members, are the representatives of a great people. We ought not to inject our politics into all of these questions. We have moved along splendidly in this Congress, and there is only here and there a little ripple, enough to give a little zest and a little vim to the discussions in this House. As I said before, we have been coming together upon this measure.

It may not meet with the approval of everyone in this House, but let me say to you, using the substance if not the words of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. FOWLER], legislation is compromise. This bill that we have presented to you is the average intelligence, the average judgment, the average sense of the men who compose the Committee on Banking and Currency. We are not wedded to this bill to the extent that we can not see any good in anything else. If there is a gentleman in this House who can present an amendment which will make this bill better, we are ready to receive it. We want to do something for this country. We are not here tenaciously clinging to this measure. We believe that it is the best that can be brought forward, or else we would not have brought it here. Some of us have been studying this question four and six years, and some have been studying it longer.

I confess to my colleagues here in this House that I have changed my views along these lines. When I first entered that committee I would not have thought for a moment that I would ever stand up here and favor an asset currency in the slightest degree; but I have been looking down the line to see what kind of currency we must eventually have in this country. The bonds are being paid off. The bonds are too high in price to issue a circulation upon. There is a demand for something; this is something we offer to you gentlemen of the committee. If you have anything better, do not sit in your seats and refuse to give it to us, because you are individually responsible as well as we are for legislation in this House. No man can shirk his duty by saying he does not like this bill.

If you do not like the bill, improve it. You represent American constituencies, as we do. You represent people who want better currency, and you should join with us and make it better. We call upon you to do that; we ask you to act with us on the lines we are moving on. We are doing the best we know. It is the best light we have. We offer it to you, believing it to be the best, and we trust and hope that gentlemen on the other side who have agreed with us on the lines we are pursuing will vote with us and pass this bill through this House. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16228, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. SUTHERLAND, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LEVER, for one day, on account of important business.

NEW DIVISION OF EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17088) to create a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Texarkana, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the bill and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following resolution and bill of the following title were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 70:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 1,500 copies of Senate Document No. 452, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "Treaties, Laws, Executive Orders, etc., relating to Indian Affairs," 50 of which shall be for the use of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 50 for the use of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, 100 for the use of the Senate, 400 for the House of Representatives, 100 for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the remaining 800 shall be sold by the Superintendent of Documents.

—to the Committee on Printing.

S. 7307. An act to provide certain souvenir medallions for the benefit of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association of the United States—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I rise now, probably a little out of my order, to make my usual request, that the unanimous consent of the Senate be given for a vote, this afternoon at 2 o'clock, upon the final passage of the bill known as the omnibus statehood bill, and all amendments heretofore offered or that then may be pending, without further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this afternoon at 2 o'clock the final vote be taken on the bill known as the omnibus statehood bill, on all amendments then pending and at that time offered, without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], whose speech is not concluded, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17088) to create a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Texarkana, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Warren County; of 46 citizens of Concordia; of the congregations of the United Presbyterian, German Reformed, and Presbyterian churches of Grove City; of the Christian Endeavor Society, superintendents of the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Sunday schools, and of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church, all of Christiana, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of 184 citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict immigration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MITCHELL presented sundry papers in support of a bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hamell; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a joint memorial of the legislature of Oregon relative to the enactment of legislation for the relief of settlers on lands in Sherman County, in that State. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OREGON, HALL OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Salem, January 26, 1903.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Please find inclosed a certified copy of house joint memorial No. 1, relating to the relief of settlers on certain lands in Sherman County, Oreg., which I trust may prove of value to you in securing the enactment into law of Senate bill No. 4530, introduced by yourself March 14, 1902.

Very truly, yours,

A. C. JENNINGS, Chief Clerk.

House joint memorial No. 1.

Whereas JOHN H. MITCHELL on March 14, 1902, introduced into the Senate of the United States bill S. 4530, entitled "A bill for the relief of settlers on lands in Sherman County in the State of Oregon," which bill reads as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and ascertain the reasonable value, respectively, of the lands settled upon and heretofore claimed by the respective persons whose names are set out in full in Senate Document No. 8, second session Fifty-sixth Congress, and in Senate Document No. 240, first session Fifty-seventh Congress, and in which documents are also specifically stated an accurate description of the lands claimed by each of such persons, respectively, together with the value of the improvements thereon, respectively, all of said lands and improvements to be determined, in all cases where such settlers have been dispossessed of their lands, as of the date of the ouster of such settlers, respectively, from said lands by either The Dalles Military Wagon Road Company or the Eastern Oregon Land Company, successor in interest of The Dalles Military Road Company, in pursuance of the judgment and decree of the Supreme Court of the United States affecting the title to said lands; and it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the dates, respectively, when such settlers or any of them were, respectively, dispossessed of such lands; and in all cases where any of such settlers are still in possession of the lands so claimed by them, respectively, the value of the same and of the improvements thereon shall be determined at the date of the passage of this act.

"SEC. 2. That upon the ascertainment of such values of said lands and improvements, respectively, as hereinbefore provided in section 1 of this act, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue to said settlers, severally and respectively, a certificate of indebtedness, in which shall be stated the exact amount each of such settlers is entitled to in accordance with the ascertained value of such lands and improvements as provided for by the first section of this act, and on the presentation of such certificates by such settlers, respectively, to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States warrants shall be drawn in favor of such settlers, respectively, for the amounts, respectively, so ascertained, to be due by the Secretary of the Interior as aforesaid, which warrants shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to meet the payment of all such warrants so drawn as aforesaid.

"SEC. 3. That in the event of the death of any such settlers the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain and certify the value of such lands and improvements in the name of the legal representatives of such settler so deceased, and payments shall be made to such legal representatives in like manner as above: Provided, however, That no assigned claim of any settler shall have any recognition under the provisions of this act."

Therefore,

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby memorialized to enact said bill into law at the earliest practicable moment, as the same is a most meritorious bill, in the interest of a class of settlers on the public lands in eastern Oregon, which lands were at the time entered and settled upon by the several parties referred to in the bill declared by the Department of the Interior to be public lands of the United States and open to settlement, and which were subsequently, after homes had been established thereon, and large amounts of money expended respectively by said settlers, declared by the Supreme Court of the United States to belong to The Dalles Military Wagon Road Company, or its successor, the Eastern Oregon Land Company.

Adopted by the house January 13, 1903.

L. T. HARRIS,
Speaker of the House.

Concurred in by the senate January 15, 1903.

GEORGE C. BROWNELL,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 1, the enrolled memorial being now on file in the office of the secretary of state, Salem, Oreg.

A. C. JENNINGS,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Oregon, relative to the enactment of legislation providing for the completion of a canal and locks at The Dalles of the Columbia River in that State. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial No. 1.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

We, your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that the Columbia River, with the exception of a very short distance between The Dalles and Celilo, in the State of Oregon, is navigable all the year for boats of average tonnage from the Pacific Ocean to Kettle Falls, in the State of Washington, a distance of more than 700 miles; that owing to the topography of the country through which the said river flows the producers of the vast region known as the Columbia basin, which comprises an area of not less than 2,300,000 acres, mostly arable land, can cheaply reach the markets of the world with their products only by means of the channel of the Columbia River, and for that reason the removal of all obstructions to navigation therein and the consequent reduction of transportation rates is a matter of most urgent necessity; that the obstructions to navigation alluded to can be overcome by the construction of properly equipped canal and locks between the points named; that a careful survey and plans for such canal and locks, with detail drawings and estimates, have been made under the direction of Capt. W. A. Harts, Engineer Corps, United States Army, which shows that the probable cost of such improvement would not exceed $3,969,000.

Your memorialists, therefore, pray that said improvement be speedily commenced and vigorously prosecuted to an early completion.

Adopted by the senate January 13, 1903.

GEORGE C. BROWNELL,
President of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house January 14, 1903.

L. T. HARRIS,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Oregon, relative to the enactment of legislation providing for a convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution so as to elect United States Senators by a direct vote of the peeple. I ask that the joint memorial be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Oregon legislature. Twenty-second regular session. Senate joint memorial No. 6.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialist, the legislative assembly of the State of Oregon, most respectfully represents:

That there is a strong and growing demand upon the part of the citizens of the several States of the Union that the United States Senators should be elected by a direct vote of the people.

Wherefore your memorialist most earnestly and respectfully asks that Congress pass an act calling for a convention for the purpose of amending the Constitution so as to elect United States Senators by a direct vote of the people.

That this memorial be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the request that they present the same and urge the immediate passage of a law in accordance therewith, and that the governor forward a copy of this resolution to the governors of the several States.

Adopted by the Senate January 26, 1903.

GEORGE C. BROWNELL, President.

Concurred in by the House January 27, 1903.

L. T. HARRIS, Speaker.

I, S. L. Moorhead, chief clerk of the senate, hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the original.

S. L. MOORHEAD, Chief Clerk.

PRODUCTION OF SUGAR.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed a letter addressed to me by Mr. Truman G. Palmer on the question of sugar. It is a statement that ought to be before the Senate when the questions that are now liable to come up shall be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the printing as a Senate document of the paper which he sends to the desk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator desire any reference of the paper?

Mr. TELLER. I do not care to have it referred. I wish to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed, and will lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6679) granting to railroads and water companies the right of way through public lands and reservations of the United States for reservoirs and pipe lines, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9865) providing for the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska for the House of Representatives of the United States, defining citizenship and the qualifications of electors in said Territory, to report it with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting a substitute; also reporting an amendment to the title of the bill, with the recommendation that when the bill has been thus amended it shall pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

AMERICAN NATIONAL INSTITUTE AT PARIS, FRANCE.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7368) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France, to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France.

Mr. TELLER. From what committee does it come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TELLER. Where do we get authority to create corporations in France?

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that it is an incorporation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER. That may be, but the title would indicate that we are creating a corporation in France. I think the title had better be changed.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey what is the purpose of this incorporation? What kind of a corporation is it?

Mr. KEAN. It is an art society, very similar to the incorporation that was made of a society at Rome. It requires no appropriation of money from the Treasury. It will simply take over gifts and grants to this art society in Paris.

Mr. BERRY. Is it the same bill that was here at the last session, proposing to make an appropriation to build a home for students in Paris, and all that kind of thing?

Mr. KEAN. There is no appropriation in it whatever.

Mr. BERRY. Does it contemplate one hereafter by the Government?

Mr. KEAN. The bill contemplates no appropriation whatever by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. There was a bill, I rembember, before us last year which authorized the building of a home for art students in Paris.

Mr. KEAN. There was such a bill before the Committee on Foreign Relations, but this is not that bill.

Mr. BERRY. This is not that bill?

Mr. KEAN. This is another bill. There is no appropriation in it whatever.

Mr. BERRY. It does not contemplate any appropriation hereafter by the Government in any way?

Mr. KEAN. This bill does not. I can not say what people may do hereafter.

Mr. BERRY. I mean, was the bill framed with that in view?

Mr. KEAN. It was not.

Mr. TELLER. I think the title ought to be changed. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill, but the title should be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a matter to be considered after the bill has been passed.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to any amendment to the title the Senator chooses to suggest.

Mr. TELLER. We can not create a corporation in France, and we ought not to indicate in the title of the bill that we are undertaking to do such a thing.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to have the bill go over. It has been read and it can be called up to-morrow morning. I want to look at it a little further. I object to its consideration to-day.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will not object to the bill. I objected to it when it was before the Senate on a former occasion because Congress, it is admitted, has no inherent power to create corporations. It is limited, as a rule, in creating corporations to those which are to be Federal instrumentalities. We have the right to create corporations in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, and nowhere else. This is a bill which creates a corporation in the District of Columbia, and the corporation is organized to do certain things in Paris.

Mr. BERRY. I withdraw the objection on the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HALE. The ordinary course of these matters is that after we have incorporated a company for work or exhibition or any kind of exploitation abroad, the next thing is a request that the Government shall contribute, because it has authorized the incorporation and has given it the sanction of the Government. As it is an institution abroad we shall be asked to contribute something to it, as was done on another occasion of the kind, where we incorporated an art company to be located at Rome, and the next thing the Government was asked to do was to help it.

Mr. SPOONER. We did not do it.

Mr. HALE. No, we did not do it; but some of us had to fight it.

Mr. SPOONER. We will keep on fighting it.

Mr. HALE. Naturally we pass these measures because some individual interested in such an institution besieges some member of the committee and wants the Government to interfere and to incorporate it, and the committee yields to it and allows the member to report the bill. It gets through, and after it has gone through we are asked to give Government sanction to it. I should like in this case to have just as full a disclaimer of anything of that kind as the Senator from Wisconsin can make, and he is very expert in language. I should like to have a full disclaimer that will shut off what is otherwise inevitable, the request of this corporation, whatever it is, that the Government shall help it, because such aid would be for the benefit of our people abroad.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Maine calls upon me as an expert in the use of language to make a disclaimer. I only claim to be able so far to use language as to sometimes express exactly what is in my mind.

Mr. HALE. Not to conceal it?

Mr. SPOONER. Not to conceal it. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying to the Senator from Maine that I would never vote for, but, on the contrary, I would oppose to the uttermost of my power, any proposition to make out of the public Treasury a contribution of any kind to forward the purpose of the bill. I will say the same thing as to the proposition to create a corporation and maintain a certain establishment in Rome.

But there is a real good purpose, Mr. President, in this bill. We create corporations constantly in the Territories and constantly in the District of Columbia without the slightest thought or purpose ever to make them beneficiaries, in a financial way, of the public Treasury. All over the United States, and it can not be helped, are sent out from home to Paris young men and young women to study music and to study art, just as they are sent to Rome. The purpose of this bill is to create a corporation of the District of Columbia which can receive from public-spirited people who understand and appreciate the situation donations, with which it expects to establish in Paris a home which shall be an American home for the students of art and music, where they can assemble, where they can keep in touch with people at home, where they can be gathered in from the Latin Quarter, and where they can be shielded in a measure from the snares, and they are innumerable, which have been found to surround them, without such a central American home in Paris with always an open door.

It is not intended to cost the Government a cent. All we give them is the power to become a corporation of the District of Columbia. It is my own opinion, and I think it will be the opinion of the Senate, that the purpose is a wise one, and that there is nothing whatever of danger in it. As to appropriating money to maintain a home for students of art and music out of the public Treasury, in Paris or Rome or in any foreign country, I think there is no Senator here who would support it for a moment. I would not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not hear all of the explanation, but I have heard enough to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator always hears enough for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. If these people desire to go to Paris and to have a building and provide a home and surroundings for Americans there studying music and art, I want to know why they can not get it without our bothering with an incorporation.

Mr. SPOONER. Because that would be purely an individual matter; the accountability and responsibility would rest entirely upon individuals.

Mr. TILLMAN. Could they not have a joint stock association under the French law?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator asked me a question and he ought to permit me to answer it. There are a great many people who would be willing to subscribe money for such a purpose to a corporation created in the United States, subject to the visitorial power of Congress, subject to amendment here as time might indicate the necessity for amendment, who would not be willing to contribute large sums of money to a voluntary association in France, an unorganized and informal association of individuals. Individuals die. A corporation does not die. The whole purpose of this measure, and there is not the slightest element of danger in it, is to create a corporation of the District of Columbia which shall be authorized, of course with the permission of France, and that they will obtain——

Mr. TILLMAN. If a corporation composed of American citizens is organized and created in France, would not the same end be reached?

Mr. SPOONER. That would be subject to the visitorial power and regulation of France. A great many Americans who are there——

Mr. TILLMAN. How would we exercise visitorial power in Paris?

Mr. SPOONER. We exercise visitorial power here. It is a corporation of the District of Columbia, authorized by Congress, whose powers are limited entirely by an act of Congress, which can be dissolved entirely by an act of Congress, from which reports can be called by Congress, all whose transactions can be investigated by Congress; and we would have no jurisdiction whatever over a corporation organized in France.

Mr. HALE. That is an important point. Is it intended that in addition to our incorporating this institution the Government is to have the power of inspection and visitation and the control of its funds or the scrutiny of its funds? If that is the case, certainly the Government will be called upon hereafter.

Mr. SPOONER. Not the control of its funds at all.

Mr. HALE. Is it that the Government will have any sort of jurisdiction over it in the way of control?

Mr. SPOONER. The Government would have jurisdiction over it, just as it has jurisdiction over the corporation created by the bill which was passed for the Daughters of the Revolution. It has never been proposed that Congress should appropriate money for that organization or that Congress should be responsible for the expenditure of its fund.

Mr. HALE. Is Congress to have anything to do with this company in the way of its management?

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all.

Mr. HALE. Or scrutiny over what it does?

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all, except this: Congress has the power to repeal it if its function is being abused.

Mr. HALE. I do not want Congress to have anything to do with it at all. I do not object to its bare charter, setting it forth.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HALE. But what the Senator said about Congress having power to scrutinize and examine into its conduct is connected with the Government's responsibility.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator knows that Congress can not create a corporation which it has not the power to control.

Mr. HALE. It may repeal the act.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. HALE. But I do not understand that when we barely incorporate a company and send it out on a private mission, no matter what it may be, we have any control over it afterwards, except that we can repeal the act.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is mistaken. There is not a State in this Union and there is not any government that creates a corporation which has not visitorial power over it, if it chooses to exercise it. No sovereignty creates corporations to stand forever beyond the reach of its power. In every State, if the corporation abuses the franchise given, if it violates the law of its being, the State by quo warranto can put an end to it. It is done by quo warranto instead of repeal, but it can do both ordinarily. It is done by quo warranto in order to give the corporation its day in court upon the question of fact or law, or mixed law and fact—to show whether it has violated its charter or not.

There is no harm that can come to Congress growing out of the mere fact that it has power over a corporation which it creates. We have created corporations that were not intended to operate in the District of Columbia at all, and we have power over them because we are their creator, and no harm or inconvenience has ever flowed from that fact, so far as I know. The Senator certainly would not claim for a moment that we should create a corporation in the District of Columbia and then leave it entirely independent of the Government.

Mr. HALE. A corporation that deals with affairs in the District of Columbia is a part of our responsibility, because the District of Columbia is under the Government; we do everything for it; but when we create a corporation that is to go abroad and establish a home in Paris for American students, travelers, pupils, all to be done there, none to be done here, if it is to be understood that we are to have anything to do with the management of that concern, with the scrutiny of it, the moment that the concern gets into trouble and is threatened with bankruptcy, we will find the people who put money in it will come in and ask the Government to exercise its power of scrutiny which the Senator invokes, and to exercise the management, and wind it up, if necessary, and next, make the losers good.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I object to the bill, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7407) to authorize the Donora Southern Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River in the State of Pennsylvania, to report it with amendments and to submit a report thereon. I observe that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has stepped out of the Chamber. He intended to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, but as he is absent at this moment I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, page 1, line 12, after the word "county," to strike out the following:

> The said bridge, when built in accordance with the requirements of this act, shall be a legal structure for the use of the Donora Southern Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for railroad purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

> SEC. 2. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be a lawful structure and shall be known as a post-road, over which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation of mails, troops, and munitions of war or other property of the Government of the United States, or for passengers or freight passing over the same, than the rate per mile charged for their transportation over the railways or public highways leading to said bridge. The United States shall also have the right of way over said bridge for postal telegraph purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

> SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of the bridge authorized by this act shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same and over the approaches thereto upon the payment of a reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proof of the parties; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. ALDRICH from the Committee on Finance, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and it was agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to make an investigation of internal revenue, customs, currency and coinage matters, and to report from time to time to the Senate the result thereof; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess or sessions of the Senate, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary, the expense of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 7428) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to the sale, use, and disposition of butts, hogsheads, barrels, casks, or kegs used by the manufacturers of malt liquors," approved the 4th day of April, A. D. 1865; and extending the provisions thereof to the sale, use, and disposition of milk cans, butter boxes, ice-cream cans, and ice-cream tubs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7429) to prevent trespassing upon, and providing for the protection of, the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park and Antietam battlefield; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 7430) authorizing the recorder of the General Land Office to issue certified copies of patents, records, books, and papers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 7431) for the relief of the owners of the British steamship Mogul; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 7432) granting an increase of pension to George O. Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MARCH'S THESAURUS.

Mr. PENROSE. On January 29 I introduced a bill (S. 7169) authorizing the purchase of 5,000 copies of March's Thesaurus, which was referred to the Committee on the Library. I now move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment providing for the settlement of the claims of the States of California and Oregon for costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the States of California and Oregon, respectively, for enrolling, subsisting, clothing, supplying, arming, paying, and transporting their troops employed in aiding to suppress the insurrection against the United States in the war of 1861, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $282,943.88 to pay the amounts found by the commissioner of the Court of Claims to be due letter carriers under the act of May 24, 1888, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment relative to the allowance and payment upon proper proof of claims for rebates on tobacco and snuff, as set out in section 4 of the act approved April 4, 1902, which were presented after sixty days' limit therein specified, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to pay the expenses on the part of the United States of the joint commission appointed for the adjustment of differences between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Subsequently Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the foregoing amendment, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment proposing that in adjusting the accounts of claims between the State of South Carolina and the United States provided for by the act of Congress approved May 27, 1902, any bonds of that State held by the United States shall be credited as offsets to the United States as of date of the maturity of any such bonds, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,137.90 for extra compensation to certain employees of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the maintenance of a wagon road through the Cascade Forest Reserve, in the State of Oregon, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 to enable the Secretary of War to reimburse George W. Dant, of the District of Columbia, for such losses and expenses, including counsel fees, incurred by him growing out of the Ford's Theater disaster, on June 9, 1893, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy departments to pay certain permanent and temporary employees of their respective departments for work performed by them in excess of the regular working hours during the period of the war with Spain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $168 to pay John L. Stevens, special commissioner to adjust the Des Moines River land-grant claims, for services rendered and expenses incurred since February 4, 1901, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,300 for the employment of additional clerks in the office of the assistant treasurer, Baltimore, Md., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $200 to pay C. A. Norcross for extra services before the Committee on Indian Affairs, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, since the allowance of those heretofore reported to Congress at the present session; also a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress.

LIST OF COURT JUDGMENTS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the provisions of the act to provide for bringing suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases requiring an appropriation by Congress.

ELMER E. FORSHAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. DUBOIS on the 16th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to furnish to the United States Senate a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Forshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho.

Also, whether under the ruling of the civil service he is eligible to any other position in the Government service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. This is the resolution the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asked should go over.

Mr. DUBOIS. It has gone over for a number of times. It ought not to take long to dispose of it.

Mr. BURROWS. I simply called the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the resolution is before the Senate. I make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh!

Mr. BURROWS. I understood that the Senator from Wisconsin desired to be heard upon it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes; the Senator from Wisconsin will take the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. I asked yesterday when this resolution came up that it should go over until to-day, stating that I had had a letter from the Civil Service Commission upon the subject, which was at my house. That letter is still at my house——

Mr. DUBOIS. I would say to the Senator——

Mr. SPOONER. But I have a copy, I think, of it here, and I send it to the desk that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the letter.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I was temporarily absent from the Chamber. The Secretary is reading a communication in which the word "Senator" is constantly occurring. Who is the Senator thus spoken of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, which was subsequently withdrawn by Mr. SPOONER.

Mr. DUBOIS. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to say anything?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not at this time.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he requested this letter from the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not.

Mr. DUBOIS. Well, Mr. President, I am very much surprised that the Senator from Wisconsin should have this letter read. I wish to call attention to the fact, and I will confess my ignorance in this. I do not know whether it is a law or whether it is a ruling simply of the Civil Service Commission, but they do not allow clerks in their own behalf to solicit the aid or support of Senators, yet the Civil Service Commission write an ex parte letter to Senators in response to an inquiry from another Senator in the form of a resolution calling on them for information, and in this ex parte letter to the Senators they call the aid and assistance of Senators to the Commission.

I have not received any such letter, except (and I am very glad to note the exception) through the courtesy of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who in all my dealings and relations with him has been extremely courteous. We do not agree on very many questions, and sometimes I have occasion to express my opinion pretty forcibly, or as forcibly as I can, in opposition to him; but the junior Senator from Massachusetts handed me a letter precisely the same as the one which has been sent to the desk by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I am utterly amazed that the Civil Service Commission should write such a letter to I do not know how many Senators in this body, when I am directing my inquiry through a resolution of the Senate to them for some information.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DUBOIS. You will excuse me just a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. DUBOIS. Excuse me until I get through with my statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho declines to yield.

Mr. DUBOIS. Now, Mr. President, I should like to dissect this letter a little bit. The Civil Service Commission say:

In the statement of the Senator from Idaho appear a number of inaccuracies, to which I would like to call your attention:

(1) The Senator states that the clerk Forshay was ordered by the surveyor-general to receive contributions for campaign purposes, and for that he was dismissed. He was dismissed, in fact, for soliciting as well as receiving, and there was no evidence before the Commission to show that he was ordered either to solicit or receive such contributions. On the contrary, he stated, in his testimony before Inspector Greene (p. 182):

"Q. Have you ever been asked or directed by General Perrault to solicit contributions for political purposes?

"A. No, sir."

Mr. President, I wanted some information. The Civil Service Commission say Mr. Forshay was dismissed, in fact, for soliciting as well as receiving.

I state here that Mr. Forshay is as honorable a gentleman as any who sit on the Civil Service Commission, and no one has ever attacked his character. As I stated the other day, I do not know Mr. Forshay personally. I have never seen him. But I know many people who do know him intimately, and I know what his reputation is. He did not ask me to do this, and had no idea that I was going to do it. Some reference, however, to my resolution was sent out through the Associated Press. My resolution was offered in order to get some facts.

As I have stated, the Civil Service Commission say that Mr. Forshay was dismissed, in fact, for soliciting as well as receiving. Here is a telegram from Mr. Forshay, which came after my resolution was introduced:

BOISE, IDAHO, February 18, 1903.

FRED E. DUBOIS,
Senator from Idaho, Washington, D. C.:

Civil Service Commission charged me with soliciting and receiving campaign contributions from draftsman in my room. I denied the charge. On February 6 requested reinstatement in classified service.

E. E. FORSHAY.

The Commission state that Forshay received and contributed money for campaign purposes. Forshay denied the charge. I want the evidence and facts.

The Commission quote me as saying:

All I could get from the Civil Service Commission was a reference to the statutes, which provide that if anyone contributes money for campaign purposes or receives contributions for that purpose he shall be dismissed.

Then they quote my letter, which proves that that was all I got from them. I got no explanation whatever, and their letter is made a part of this letter. They inclose here a copy of their rule, and they further say that I stated:

I asked and recommended to the Civil Service Commission that he be reinstated in the service somewhere, and received a very curt reply, which conveyed to me no information at all.

They then continue:

In this the Senator is mistaken. He could get, upon application to the Commission, any information in regard to this case which he desired.

They also quote that letter. I will read their answer, which they also printed. Here is a copy of my letter.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1903.

Honorable CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in recommending for reinstatement Mr. Elmer E. Foreshay, of Boise, Idaho, who was dismissed from the service last year on a charge of receiving campaign contributions.

I know Mr. Foreshay to be a gentleman of high standing and superior attainments.

Yours, truly, FRED T. DUBOIS.

I could not have made it much more courteous. Here is their answer:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1903.

Hon. FRED T. DUBOIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your communication of February 11, you are informed that the records of this office show that Mr. Elmer E. Forshay was dismissed from the service for violation of the civil-service act. He would not be eligible for reinstatement to the position from which he was removed under the reinstatement rule, which was promulgated by the President under the same act.

Very respectfully, JOHN R. PROCTER,
President.

In reply to my courteous request that this man be reinstated, they simply say that under the law he could not be reinstated in his old place, giving to me no sort of information as to whether he could be reinstated anywhere at all. If that is not a curt letter, I do not understand what curtness is.

The Civil Service Commission further state:

The Senator states, in answer to the question: "Who dismissed this man?" "The Civil Service Commission."

And they say:

This also is inaccurate.

I did not say anything of the sort. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will very well recall that I did not intend to make that statement. The Commission then say:

The Civil Service Commission did not dismiss him, and had no power to do so.

To which I agree, finally coming back to the proposition that it was through the efforts of the Civil Service Commission. The Senator from Maine made that suggestion, in which I acquiesced. The Civil Service Commission ought to know enough to know that I am aware of the fact that they could not dismiss Mr. Foreshay; and in the statement made by the Senator from Maine that the dismissal must have come from the Secretary of the Interior I acquiesced; which makes the point only that the effort to have him dismissed originated and came from the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DUBOIS. I do.

Mr. HALE. I think it was made entirely clear in the discussion that the act of removal must have been made, and undoubtedly was made, by the head of the Department, and that the intervention of the Civil Service Commission was only in the direction of informing the Department and perhaps urging the removal—that I do not know—of conveying the knowledge of the situation to the head of the Department by the Civil Service Commission. The Senator from Idaho accepted the suggestion I made that technically the power of removal was not in the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am discussing the great Civil Service Commission, which has seen fit to write letters to several Senators giving their ex parte side of this case and trying to influence Senators to take their side of a controversy brought up by a resolution of mine to investigate the reasons why they discharged some men from the service.

Here is one of their dignified objections to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, and to him they say:

The Senator states:

'Now, the surveyor-general was removed after an investigation extending over quite a long time, I think, and through the intense activity of the Civil Service Commission, and he was the best surveyor-general the State of Idaho ever had."

Then the Commission proceed to say:

And yet the Senator states that this surveyor-general ordered one of his subordinates, belonging to the opposite party, to violate the penal laws of the United States by receiving contributions for campaign expenses, and that the subordinate collected such contributions under duress, and would have been dismissed if he had not done so. It is sincerely to be hoped that this is not the best type of surveyor-general which the Government has ever given to the State of Idaho. The Senator states that he is satisfied that the President regarded this man as one of the most competent surveyors-general in the service. Does the Senator think that the President should have reappointed a surveyor-general who compels his Democratic clerks, in violation of law, to solicit contributions for Republican campaign funds?

Why, Mr. President, I was not arguing that the surveyor-general of Idaho was the best surveyor-general in understanding and obeying the technical or any other rules of the Civil Service Commission. I was speaking of the surveyor-general of Idaho in regard to his equipment for the performance of his duties as surveyor-general of Idaho, and anyone (except people very touchy as to criticism of the use of their power) would have understood that I referred to the capacity of the surveyor-general for discharging the duties which appertain to his office, not for his ability and disposition to follow the technical rules of the Civil Service Commission.

The Commission then say:

The Senator states that he directed all his inquiries to the Civil Service Commission, and received from the Civil Service Commission all his replies stating why this man was removed.

Then they say:

I am not aware of any inquiries whatever directed to the Civil Service Commission, except as to the question whether Foreshay was eligible for reinstatement.

In this same document they publish another letter of mine directed to them, but not referring in the slightest degree to Foreshay's reinstatement. Again, the Commission say that the Senator from Idaho says that—

> The representative of the Secretary of the Interior held his meetings openly, and the surveyor-general and the clerks came before him and they had their inquiry and hearing. The representative of the Civil Service Commission held his secretly, and nobody knew what was going on.

They admit that. They say:

> The only reason why the investigation by the Commission was not an open one was because the subordinates of the surveyor-general had to be examined and protected against dismissal for testifying to the facts. If the surveyor-general was present at this investigation, they would naturally fear to testify.

Why should they fear to testify if the surveyor-general was present? Were not all these clerks to be protected by the Civil Service Commission? But, at any rate, the only charge I made was that they held a secret, not an open, investigation; and they gave a flimsy reason for holding a secret investigation.

My resolution was directed to finding out why they did these things; and in response the Senate gets not the passage of the resolution, but a letter from the Civil Service Commission to individual Senators attacking the statement made by me, when every statement I made was fairly made.

If no other reason had been assigned why there should be some investigation of the Civil Service Commission and their methods, they themselves have furnished it in this small controversy. I doubt if there is a Senator on this floor who does not believe that the Commission ought to be investigated, or that the proceedings in regard to this case at any rate ought to be made public.

Then the Commission criticises me because I said that they had not been anxious, at any rate, to let the facts be known. As I said to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] the other day, I was not compelled to beg and beseech them to give me information which rightly belonged to me when I was making inquiries in regard to citizens of my own State, my constituents, who had been discharged from office, when they themselves said those citizens ought not to have been discharged. I had a right to know without begging the Civil Service Commission for the information, and I addressed them courteous notes and received curt replies.

This letter which the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has sent me would not have been made public by me. I am as much ashamed of the Civil Service Commission for the course they have taken in this matter as any Senator on this floor, and I would not have been the one to have made it public.

The Commission also refer to what was said by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but I have no doubt he can take care of himself.

Mr. BACON. I shall have something to say about that presently.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will state that I was in error in regard to one statement only which I made the other day. I said that the surveyor-general had ordered this clerk to receive contributions. That was a natural mistake, because I was of the opinion that the clerk was of a different political party from the surveyor-general, and that voluntarily this clerk would not have received contributions, or would not have contributed, unless he had been requested to do so by the surveyor-general. I fell into that error. I find now, from the testimony, that the surveyor-general did not ask the clerk to contribute. The surveyor-general testifies to that, and the clerk himself makes the statement that the surveyor-general did not ask him to contribute. In addition to that, the clerk says that he did not contribute.

I made the statement the other day that this clerk was dismissed and could not get back, and that the surveyor-general had dismissed several other clerks; but, so far as I am informed, none of them has got back, although the Civil Service Commission proceeded against the surveyor-general for dismissing these other clerks.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the matter which is most important in connection with this most remarkable development and presentation in the Senate does not seem to me to be a question as to the right in the particular controversy arising out of this resolution, but it is a question as to the propriety of this matter being brought to the attention of the Senate in this way.

What are the facts? There is a debate in the Senate involving one of the subordinate departments of the Government. The officials of that subordinate department are to a certain extent under investigation in that debate, at least the debate looks to their investigation; the debate looks to getting from them a report; and while that resolution is pending in the Senate, and before any action has been taken by the Senate, these subordinate officials write to a number of Senators, as I am informed, a sort of circular letter, in which they not only proceed to state what they allege to be facts, but quote utterances of Senators, and enter into an argument as to the correctness of those utterances.

I think this a very important matter, and I ask the attention of Senators to it. I am not going to dignify these subordinate officials by entering into a controversy with them on this floor as to whether or not what I said was correct or what they say in reply is correct. I think it a matter of supreme effrontery on the part of these subordinates that they should assume to enter into the debates of the Senate in any such way. It is a gross, inexcusable breach of the privilege of the Senate.

What is the effect of it, Mr. President? A debate progressing in the Senate, that debate published in the RECORD, and these subordinate officials assuming practically to enter into that debate in the Senate pending the consideration of the resolution. Mr. President, if this is to be recognized as permissible, possibly we had better appoint a committee to ask these distinguished gentlemen to come into the Senate to controvert what has been said by Senators upon the floor, and give them a distinguished audience, while all keep silence, in order that they may be heard in response to what Senators say in their places. What is the difference? If it can be done in this instance and through such means, if this is to be a precedent, what is to be the consequence? Whenever one of these Departments or any subordinate subdivision of a Department shall be the subject of a matter of inquiry it is to write a letter to a Senator, not simply giving the information which is sought to be obtained by the resolution—and that would be a gross impropriety, if it was intended thereby to get it before the Senate otherwise than by its use by a Senator in debate—but to enter absolutely into an argument, to quote Senators, to say their statements are not correct, and to proceed to argue in refutation of their arguments. If it is to be done in this way in one instance, is it not to be done in all?

Mr. President, do I speak too strongly when I say that this letter is unspeakable effrontery? I think it is an indignity to the whole Senate, and I certainly would not dignify one of these subordinates by reading anything he might say in a letter of this kind, or in any manner replying to it, and I do not propose to do so.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], than whom none is habitually more careful and proper, I can but think, did not duly reflect upon the question of the propriety of spreading this communication upon the records of this Senate, and I shall be more than glad if he himself will ask that it be withdrawn from the records. Where can a precedent be found for this action of these officials? Where, since the foundation of the Government, can it be found that pending a debate in Congress the parties the subject of the debate, subordinate officials of the Government, have sought to enter into that debate by the introduction before the Senate of a letter in which they proceed to argue the very questions which are at issue, quote Senators and reply to their statements.

I repeat, Mr. President, I do not propose to dignify these subordinates by answering anything they say. I simply repel the effrontery of their assuming to bring this to the attention of the Senate in any such way.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. TELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is recognized.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I should like to say a word before the Senator from Wisconsin begins, because I think, perhaps, he might want to reply to some things I may say.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no direct connection with this controversy, but I want to say that I think it is an unheard of performance on the part of these public officers. I do not recall in my experience in the Senate anything that I regard as so gross a breach of privilege as this. I do not believe that any Cabinet officer ever has had the audacity to do what these men have done. Concerning a matter being before the Senate—it does not make any difference whether it concerns them or whether it does not—a matter with which we are dealing, they address letters to the Senate touching that controversy.

Suppose I should introduce a resolution concerning something in the War Department. Would anybody expect the Secretary of War to send a letter to some of the members of this body explaining his side of the case before the resolution passed? Would he not wait and answer the resolution? Is it not the purpose of the resolution to get the facts? Is the case to be tried on the statement of a department official when we are considering the resolution?

I do not have the pleasure of being acquainted with the Civil Service Commissioners, except that I know one member by sight and only one member. I do not mean to say anything harsh about the Commission, but I believe the Commissioners have dropped into this without due thought or consideration. I think there is one thing the Senate should indicate, and that is, that we are to maintain the traditions of the Senate, and that when we are considering a subject no executive officer shall interfere, whether it be the President or any of his subordinates. We have had enough of this indirectly for some few years, but, I repeat, so gross a breach of the privilege of the Senate I have never known before.

I think perhaps I had better not say anything further, for fear I might say more than I ought to say; but I will add that I hope in some way we shall indicate to the officials connected with the Executive Departments of the Government that they have one province and we have another, and that they shall not in the future interfere with our province.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am not able to say that the Civil Service Commission committed any act of effrontery in sending this communication to me or to other members of the Senate. It has happened often when a matter was under discussion in the Senate, dependent for its solution upon facts as to which there seemed to be doubt or controversy, that the facts as understood by the Department—whether it be the Interior Department or any other Department—were communicated to the Senators who had participated or might desire to participate in the debate.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator recall at any time in his experience in the Senate that any member of the Cabinet has ever volunteered to send to the Senate information concerning a matter under discussion in the Senate unless he was asked to do so?

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said that. What I said was that there was no effrontery, in my opinion, in the Civil Service Commission sending this communication to a Senator or to Senators. If I made a charge in the Senate, inferentially or directly based upon a statement of facts, upon executive officers of the Government, whether they were subordinate or not subordinate, I should not consider it effrontery on their part, or a thing to be resented by me, if they communicated to me the facts. If they sent a communication to the Senate, that would be another matter.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator understand that when these officials sent him this letter they expected it to be laid before the Senate?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not think anything about it. I hardly read it.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator think now that they had that intention?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not have any reason to suppose they did. I had participated in the debate. It had been suggested as to them that they had prosecuted and removed this young man Foreshay—I suppose he is a young man—for violating the civil-service law in soliciting or accepting contributions, when they were aware that he had done it by command of his superior, and that they had not proceeded against the superior who had violated the civil-service law, a statement which, if true, would be not only a violation of law upon their part, but I think a cowardly violation, an indefensible violation of law.

I opposed the adoption of the resolution knowing nothing about the facts except as they were stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] solely upon the ground that I thought it a bad practice for the Senate to inaugurate, to investigate these individual cases or this case, because I thought it would lead to endless repetition of such cases, and turn the Senate into a court of appeal in all cases of removal where there was sufficient influence upon the part of the employee removed to invoke the assistance of a Senator.

If there is any breach of the traditions of the Senate in this matter, or any effrontery to the Senate in this matter, I think I am the person chargeable with it, because I was not requested——

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question at this point.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Does the Senator really think that a communication of this sort and of this style, criticising a Senator, is a fit subject to be introduced from one of the departments into the Senate?

Mr. SPOONER. That is asking me whether I was guilty of effrontery in having it sent to the Clerk's desk and read. That is the purport of the Senator's question. I did not read all of the communication. I read but little of it. I assumed that it was a statement of the facts. I did not for one moment conceive it possible, knowing the gentleman whose name is signed to it, as I have known and met him, that there could be anything in it disrepectful to any Senator at all. We are blockaded here and are all working toward the end of the session in great haste, and I thought it proper to send to the Clerk's desk the statement of facts.

There have been precedents for it. I remember that the Senator from Connecticut made a speech here one day reflecting upon an Assistant Attorney-General, a gentleman from my State, in connection with the prosecution of certain cases in the Court of Claims and defenses interposed by the Government, which rather imputed laxity in management of the interests of the United States. That was put upon the permanent record of the Government. That gentleman sent me a letter explaining the status of the case. I sent it to the Clerk's desk and had it read. It was respectful, but it stated the facts. It did not occur to me that it was disrespectful to the Senate, and I know it did not occur to the Senator from Connecticut that it was disrespectful to him.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator that there is a very great difference between that case and this. That was a case where I can see no attempt to influence the Senate in its action. It was a mere defense of the writer.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no attempt here to influence the Senate in its action.

Mr. TELLER. Probably they did not so intend, but that would be the result of this kind of correspondence with Senators. If they did desire to do that, that was the proper way, I suppose, from their standpoint, to do it—to write a letter to a Senator. They have no business to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, that is a question of opinion.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator it is not a question of opinion.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator——

Mr. TELLER. It is a question settled by the English-speaking people that the executive department must not interfere with the legislative department. The King of Great Britain would no more think of writing to Parliament a note about anything pending before it than he would of resigning his crown—not a bit.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, I do not know whether he would not think about it, not to Parliament, although possibly to a member of Parliament.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to say to the Senator that the history of the English Parliament in former times is full of rebukes on account of appeals by the King. They have become entirely disused in these days.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes; of course an appeal of the King. That is one thing. The relation is entirely different.

Mr. TELLER. Not much.

Mr. SPOONER. Absolutely different. The argument is entirely different. How many times in the experience of Senators, when some matter is under investigation in the Senate as to which the Executive Department, having it entirely in charge, and being fully cognizant of the facts, finds it to be inaccurately understood by the Senate, or to be based upon an inaccurate statement or knowledge of the fact, is it brought personally or by letter to the attention of some Senator who participated in the debate? I have known it many times.

There was no effort at all in this letter to prevent the passage of the resolution. I had opposed the passage of the resolution, and this letter asks me practically and gives reasons for it, to withdraw any opposition to the resolution. It was not intended to influence the action of the Senate. I would be as slow, I think, to put any affront upon the Senate as any other member of this body. Perhaps if I had read the communication through I would not have sent it to the desk. I have not now read it through. I heard only a part of it read, because I was engaged. But the letter expresses the hope that the resolution will pass, and I have no idea of opposing it further.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator that from his own statement this is a clear case of an attempt to influence the Senate. Have they any more right to ask that the resolution be passed than that it be not passed? Is it not their business to let us alone?

Mr. SPOONER. That is very refined. I suspect that the Senator from Colorado, as Secretary of the Interior, when matters were pending in Congress affecting his Department, expressed his opinion to Senators.

Mr. TELLER. I never expressed my opinion to a Senator unless he came and asked me about it. Then I did it always with reluctance. I have been one of those who have maintained all of the time in my service in the Senate that the Executive Departments had no business to address the Senate, directly or indirectly, unless asked, except as the statutes require them to do. I apply that to the President of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I need to say it, but if the President should send for me, which he does not do, and should say there was certain legislation he wanted passed I would consider it a breach of privilege and one of which he ought not to be guilty. As an executive officer I never have been guilty of that breach of manners, or morals, or law, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose if the Senator should be sent for and inquired of by the President whether he thought certain legislation would be wise or not it would be no breach.

Mr. TELLER. It would not be a breach, but we hear in these days that the President says, "This must be done."

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it is disrespectful to say that a statement is inaccurate or that a Senator is mistaken in a statement of fact. For that it is not to be imputed that the Commission is guilty of effrontery. I should be disciplined for presenting the letter to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. Not if they had a right to write the letter.

Mr. SPOONER. Well.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask the Senator what would be our condition here if the Attorney-General or the Postmaster-General, because of some criticism, should write a letter and make that letter a subject of discussion in the Senate? Could we maintain the relation that ought to exist between the executive branch of the Government and the legislative branch if we allowed that for any length of time?

Mr. SPOONER. If a Senator makes a mistake in his statement about something that he assumes the Attorney-General has done, I never thought it would be any great breach or any breach of proper respect for the Senate for the Attorney-General to state either by note or orally to a Senator the fact.

Mr. TELLER. I will not discuss that with the Senator. He does not agree with me.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the way it has seemed to me.

I have no objection to the passage of the resolution; but I was not requested to lay this letter before the Senate. Probably if I had read it I would not have done so. I certainly should not if there is anything in it disrespectful to the Senate.

I wish to say one word more. I received a telegram from Mr. Perrault, who was the surveyor-general, in which he states to me, and I want to make the statement publicly, that he was entirely exonerated before the Secretary of the Interior by Mr. Foreshay from the charge of having instructed him to solicit or receive subscriptions.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not care anything specially about this resolution. I think it is entirely a minor matter compared with that which has grown out of it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] does not draw, as I think, a correct distinction between occurrences of the past and this one. If it had been simply a communication to a Senator stating in a concise way the facts which he himself might wish to use in debate, I am not prepared to say that there would be any impropriety in it. But this is a very different communication, and I think the Senator will search the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in vain to find anything which approaches it.

Mr. President, if we had adopted the course suggested by me when I was on the floor before and had asked these officials to appear before the Senate and argue their case, would they not have said exactly what has been said by them in this letter? They do not confine themselves simply to a communication of the facts. They make an argument in exactly the same terms as if they were present to make the argument to the Senate, quoting the utterances of Senators and replying thereto.

The Senator from Wisconsin says that he has no reason to believe that the intention was that the communication should be laid before the Senate. Mr. President, I think that anybody who will read the communication will come to a very clear conclusion that it was the intention that it should be laid before the Senate. The Senator will perceive to what extent this, in its natural development, would lead if any officer of an Executive Department, when a matter connected with his department was under discussion, could indirectly in this way introduce into the Senate not simply information, but an argument, quoting the sentences of Senators as they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and then replying thereto.

Mr. President, I am very glad to know what the Senator from Wisconsin has stated; that he had not read through this remarkable communication when he sent it to the desk. If he had read it through I could only repeat what I said before, that the Senator must, on reflection, recognize the fact that his action in this instance had not been characterized by the prudence and good judgment which uniformly characterize all his actions in the Senate. And I submit to the Senator the suggestion, in view of his statement that he had not read the letter, in view of the manifest impropriety of it, in view of the gross effrontery of it, and in view of the assumption of a right to attempt, on the part of these officials, to participate in the debates of the Senate, that he himself ask that the letter be taken out of the RECORD. I am unwilling that the RECORD should carry with it for all time this remarkable communication. If it was not intended for the Senate, then the Senator has an additional reason for not having it in the RECORD; and if it was intended for the Senate, words are inadequate to express what my estimate would be as to the gross impropriety and the effrontery of it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think this is a good deal of a tempest in a teapot. But not having read the communication, except a few lines of it, I ask leave to withdraw it. I will read it, and if it seems to me a disrespectful communication, a communication which ought not to be spread upon the records of the Senate, I shall not reoffer it. If I come to a different conclusion, I shall reoffer it and let the Senate deal with it.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator from Wisconsin withdraws the letter, I suggest to him that he can not withdraw the debate. The RECORD will show that a letter has been discussed and reference has been made to it. Will not the presence of the letter in the RECORD be necessary in order to make the debate intelligible?

Mr. BACON. I do not think so.

Mr. FORAKER. The letter speaks for itself. It is immaterial to me whether it is out or in the RECORD. I agree with the Senators who have criticised the letter as to its character and as to the impropriety of it; but it is in the RECORD, at least the debate is there, and I do not see how it can go out.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will carry out his intention. Let him examine the letter and determine what he will do about it.

Mr. SPOONER. I will examine the letter.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. DUBOIS. After the debate that has gone on, I think it but fair to the Civil Service Commission that all the facts shall be brought out, and if there is no objection I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment to the resolution. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution the following:

Also the evidence and testimony in regard to the conduct of the surveyor-general's office by Mr. Perrault, including the testimony taken both before a representative of the Secretary of the Interior and a representative of the Civil Service Commission.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ALLOTMENTS OF SEAMEN'S WAGES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7337) to amend the act of December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, and to promote commerce," in respect to allotments.

Mr. MASON. I gave notice that to-day, after the conclusion of the morning business, I would call up the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Illinois suspend for a moment? The Chair has recognized the Senator from Florida, who now has the floor, and will recognize the Senator from Illinois later.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Florida?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that paragraph (b) of section 24 of the act referred to be amended to read as follows:

(b) That it shall be lawful for any seaman to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of any portion of the wages which he may earn to his grand parents, parents, wife, sister, or children. It shall be lawful for any seaman, engaged in a vessel in the trade between the ports of the United States, or in trade between ports of the United States and the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the West Indies, and Mexico, to stipulate in his shipping agreement for an allotment of an amount, to be fixed by regulation of the Commissioner of Navigation, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, not exceeding one month's wages, to an original creditor, in liquidation of any just debt for board or clothing which he may have contracted prior to engagement; and so much of paragraph (c) of section 24 of the act of December 21, 1898, as conflicts herewith is hereby repealed.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask whether the bill has been reported from the Committee on Commerce?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported unanimously from the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President ——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that he would recognize the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] to call up the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MASON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am authorized by the committee to withdraw the first amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. PROCTOR. Next, on page 65 I move to insert, in line 10, after the word "sixty," the word "five;" so as to read "sixty-five." That was the action of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 10, it is proposed to amend by adding, after the word "sixty," the word "five;" so as to read "$65,000."

Mr. PROCTOR. That was the action of the committee and the copy was so sent, but it was a misprint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Again, on page 89, line 4, I move to strike out the word "Division" and insert "Bureau," to conform to other parts of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. As to the amendment on the last page, beginning in line 4 and including the balance of the bill, the Secretary of Agriculture is very anxious to change the amendment, and I move that the vote by which it was concurred in be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PROCTOR. And in lieu of it I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

EMERGENCY APPROPRIATION.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to stamp out and eradicate the foot-and-mouth disease and other contagious diseases of animals, to be used for no other purpose, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CURRENCY OF PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, agreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands, with the following amendments:

Page 2, line 9, of the Senate amendment, after "contract," insert:

Provided, That debts contracted prior to the 31st day of December, 1903, may be paid in the legal-tender currency of said islands existing at the time of the making of said contracts, unless otherwise expressly provided by contract.

Pages 7 and 8 of the Senate amendment, strike out all of section 14.

Mr. LODGE. I would move to concur in the House amendments, but I ask the attention of the Senator from Colorado to one of them.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I understand that section 14, which has been stricken out in the House, is the amendment I offered to the Philippine currency bill and which was adopted in the Senate. I saw yesterday in an evening newspaper a statement that the Senate Committee on Finance had unanimously agreed to report an amendment to the sundry civil bill to attain the same object and making an appropriation for the purpose. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state what he knows upon the subject?

Mr. LODGE. The Committee on Finance has unanimously reported an amendment covering the provision embodied in section 14, but carrying an appropriation, and it is proposed by the Committee on Finance to move it as an amendment to the sundry civil bill. I think there will be no doubt whatever of its acceptance. That makes section 14 in this bill unnecessary. For that reason, if the Senator from Colorado has no objection, I will move to concur in the amendments of the House and dispose of the bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the bill as proposed to be amended be printed and lie over.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will not delay the bill at this stage of the session. This Philippine legislation is of great importance. The amendment is one moved by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] and we are going to put it on the sundry civil appropriation bill. We have made no change in the Senate bill except that.

Mr. RAWLINS. That is the very question I wanted to inquire of the Senator. Perhaps he can give the necessary information upon that subject. I notice that the House has adopted an amendment making this currency a legal tender in payment of debts contracted prior to a certain date. That is a provision which I do not quite understand. Perhaps the Senator can explain the provision.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it is simply a proviso that debts contracted prior to the 31st day of December, 1903, which is the earliest date at which the Mexican dollar can be withdrawn, may be paid in the legal-tender currency of the islands existing at this time. It is a very simple amendment and a very proper one. It simply provides that existing contracts shall be paid in the legal-tender currency in which they were made.

Mr. RAWLINS. There is one other question which I should like to ask the Senator, if I can have his attention. I should like to know if the bill in its present form prohibits the circulation as money of the Mexican currency now in the islands? Is there anything in the bill prohibiting its continued circulation as money?

Mr. LODGE. There is nothing prohibiting its circulation as money except the fact that the legal-tender quality is withdrawn from it after a certain date and it will circulate only as bullion or as foreign coin circulates in any country. There is nothing to prohibit the introduction of Mexican coin or the coin of any other country.

Mr. RAWLINS. Is there anything in the bill to encourage the circulation of the money which the bill provides for other than that such money is made a legal tender in payment of debts where the contract does not otherwise provide?

Mr. LODGE. I do not see how you can give any encouragement to any money greater than to make it the only legal tender. The new silver peso is made the only legal tender for debts, except gold currency of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not desire to delay action on this bill, but I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill, while providing for a currency, does not give it control of the field for circulation in the Philippine Islands.

When the national paper currency was provided for the circulation of all other forms of money was prohibited, being taxed out of existence in the United States or otherwise discouraged.

It seems to me that the effect of this bill will be to provide at least three different and distinct kinds of money for the Philippine Islands: A gold currency, which perhaps will not circulate; the silver currency which is to be coined under the provisions of the act, which is to constitute a legal tender in the payment of debts where the contract does not otherwise provide, and the mass of Mexican money which is now in circulation throughout the islands.

This latter money is that with which the people of the islands are familiar. It will continue to circulate. It will doubtless perform most of the functions of money in the transaction of business in the islands. Its condition as a currency will be the same as it is now in relation to gold. It will fluctuate, perhaps, to a greater extent in its relation to other forms of money than it does now, and the same embarrassment which now prevails by reason of the uncertain relation of the currency of the islands to that of other countries will exist.

It appears to me that the bill will not be a cure for the evils against which it is intended to be directed. It differs from the currency which is provided by Great Britain in India, because there the circulation of the rupee as currency is forbidden by law, and the Government coinage of Great Britain is given the exclusive field for circulation throughout that country. This bill does not make the currency which it provides the exclusive currency of the islands, but leaves the Mexican money now in circulation there to continue in circulation.

Mr. President, I wish to make one other observation. Those who desire this bill, I think, are mainly persons in the official service of the United States and not the inhabitants of the islands. Persons in the islands who have fixed incomes, whose salaries are provided by law, and which at present are payable in the Mexican coinage in circulation in the islands, find the real value of their salaries constantly diminishing on account of the depreciation in the value of silver.

One year ago silver was worth about 64 cents an ounce. At this time it is worth about 48 cents an ounce. That represents the depreciation in the real value of the salaries which are provided by law and paid to our Government officials in the Philippine Islands.

On account of this great depreciation in the value of silver there has arisen a very urgent demand on the part of these employees of ours in the islands that the United States should provide a more stable currency, so that the salaries which are provided for them now by law may have some degree of stability; that they may know to-day what will be the purchasing power of money which they will derive as compensation for their services in the future.

This bill, in my judgment, is not designed and will not have the effect of relieving the situation of the native inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. It will afford relief to the officials of the United States exercising the powers of government in the islands.

It is complained by the Commission that the present uncertain value of the money of the islands, measured by the gold standard in other countries, is of great advantage to the Bank of Hongkong and other banks that are carrying on business in the islands. If that were so, these banks would undoubtedly be hostile to the passage of this legislation. On the contrary, they are very desirous that it shall become a law.

Mr. President, the effect of the legislation, in my opinion, will be this: Our officials and foreigners doing business in the islands will demand, as they have a right to do, the payment of all their debts in the money of the highest purchasing power; that is, in gold, or in pesos at the ratio of 32 to 1 as compared with gold; that is, with silver having a value of 64 cents. The native inhabitants who are not familiar with this new kind of currency and who have claims against Americans or foreigners or others doing business in the islands will be paid in the cheapest money; that is, in silver having a purchasing power at the rate of 48 cents an ounce.

The effect of this, Mr. President, is going to work great hardship upon the native inhabitants of the islands, just as the adoption of Government coinage in Great Britain had upon the people of India, depreciating the value and purchasing power of the currency in the hands of the people to such an extent that they were unable longer to use it to supply themselves with food and other things necessary to their existence.

It is well understood that in India, in consequence of the adoption of that monetary policy on the part of Great Britain, the utmost distress prevailed and many thousands of people starved to death. In the Philippine Islands, unless I am mistaken in the effect of this legislation, we will have similar troubles. We will have one stable currency for foreigners and Government officials, and they will invariably demand payment of their salaries and of their debts in that valuable currency.

Another currency, namely, the Mexican peso, or dollar in general circulation among the people, being the only money with which the native inhabitants are familiar, they will be called upon to accept payment of their obligations in that money, and being the money with which they are familiar they will accept it, and thus the native inhabitants will be put to the disadvantage of receiving all their pay in a depreciated, fluctuating currency, while the foreigners, the banks, and the Government officials of the United States will receive their pay in the stable currency of greater purchasing power.

So, Mr. President, this legislation, it seems to me, is inadequate. It ought to provide a uniform currency for the islands. It ought to provide for the redemption of the Mexican money now in circulation in the islands in the money which this bill is intended to provide. There ought to be a period fixed within which all this money should be brought in and exchanged upon some basis for the money which is intended to be provided by the bill, so that when the legislation takes effect there will be but one currency in the islands, the currency which is intended by this legislation. You will only have a stable currency in the islands when that is accomplished. There will be no other currency to compete with it. The native will get the same benefit as the foreigners and the Americans under such a uniform currency. But under the scheme which this bill provides the natives will have the unstable currency and the Americans and foreigners the stable currency of higher value, with the unlimited opportunity on the part of the latter to speculate to the disadvantage of the former.

I deemed it proper, Mr. President, while we on this side are not responsible for this legislation, to call attention to this feature of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will suspend for one moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. LODGE. I hope that may be temporarily laid aside, so as to allow us to dispose of the pending motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of this bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say on this question.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I think it would be well enough that something be said in behalf of those upon this side of the Chamber who do not entirely concur with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] in his objections to the bill.

His chief objection, as I understand it, is that when the Senate measure becomes a law there will be two kinds of currency; that the present silver money of the islands will continue in circulation while the new money will also be in circulation, the latter for one class of people and the old currency for another.

So far as I am concerned, I am glad that the present currency in the islands is not peremptorily retired nor called in, because it will take a very considerable time before any new system can adjust itself or be adjusted to the financial necessities of those people. There would be a stress in the money market in the islands if the present circulating medium was to be suddenly retired and the new and the dearer money required to take its place. I believe that the differences will settle themselves automatically. I can see no obstacle in the way of the Philippine Commission from time to time fixing the exchange value of the present Spanish or Mexican dollar. By that means both systems of money will have the same relation to the necessities of commerce and labor. It will give to the people of the islands a greater amount of money while the process of adjustment is automatically proceeding.

So far as the Senate is concerned, it could take but one of two systems of money for the islands. The House adopted a measure which gave to the islands the American system, the American dollar, half dollar, and dime, together with such paper money as might be circulated. I looked upon that, if it should be adopted, as a calamity; why, it is unnecessary at this time to state. But those who have discussed financial questions and given thought to financial subjects should, it seems to me, comprehend in a moment why the sudden introduction of this immensely dearer quality of money—American money—would create very serious distress in the islands.

There is no law upon the statute books which forbids the circulation of foreign metal money in the United States, and yet we have none in circulation. The difficulties of two systems of money, the fact that the Mexican dollar must circulate at less than its bullion value if its use is continued in the islands, the fact that it is constantly changing its value in relation to labor and the commodities, will, in my opinion, cause it to disappear altogether as the volume of the new money is increased, as million after million of the 75,000,000 pesos which are provided for are put in circulation in the islands.

It is for that reason that I prefer the bill of the Senate Committee on the Philippines rather than the bill of the House. I really believe that it is a genuine benefit to the people of the islands that for the time being their present system of money is not seriously disturbed, except in so far that after the period stated it will not be a legal tender for any purpose.

It is for that reason, Mr. President, that several of us on this side of the Chamber have approved of the committee bill, thinking it far better for the people of the islands than the bill which was passed by the House.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I do not wish to be misunderstood in relation to this bill, and I might be if I did not make some response to the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado.

I think that the present bill is preferable to the bill which was passed by the House of Representatives. I agree with the Senator from Colorado in that respect. My criticism of this legislation is not that the House bill or the extension of the American currency to the islands is preferable to the currency which this bill is designed to provide.

At the last session of Congress the Senate Committee on the Philippines agreed unanimously upon a system of currency for the islands, and I am still of the opinion that the method of supplying money to the islands provided for in that bill will be far superior to that provided by either the House bill or the bill which is now offered as a substitute for it.

I wish merely to point out the difficulty of putting into effect the present legislation. The Senator from Colorado is undoubtedly right in saying that you can not at once instantaneously take from the people of the islands the money which is now in circulation there. It is impracticable, it is impossible, to put into circulation to the extent necessary to transact the business of the islands the money which is provided in this bill. There must of necessity elapse some time during which there will be a substitution of the money now in circulation for that which it is proposed to put into circulation.

It is not to that that my objection to this bill lies. The objection I have to the bill is that it leaves the Mexican money now in circulation to continue in circulation. There is no method in the bill by which the money which is provided is to be substituted for the money now in circulation in the islands but the provision that after a certain time the Mexican money will no longer be a legal tender in the payment of debts, while the money provided by the bill will be such legal tender except as otherwise provided by the contract of the parties.

We shall then have the Mexican money now in circulation and the money provided by this bill, the former the only money with which the native inhabitants are familiar. The present currency, of greater stability and value in its purchasing power, will be demanded by the foreigners and by the Americans. There is a rule that cheap money drives out good money; but it is very questionable whether the Mexican currency in the Philippine Islands will ever be driven out by the currency which this bill is intended to provide.

The Senator from Colorado says that in the United States we have no foreign coins in circulation. We have no currency except that which is recognized by law in the United States; but I would like to invite the attention of Senators to the fact that there is a very excellent reason why that is so. Formerly in this country foreign coins did circulate as money to a very considerable extent. We have a law upon our statute books which taxes out of existence all circulation coming in competition with the lawful money of the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no taxation on silver.

Mr. RAWLINS. All paper money. All attempts to imitate the coins of the United States are punished by fine and imprisonment, and the silver coinage of the United States is token money in effect. It has a fictitious monetary value which far exceeds the bullion value. Of course, no citizen of the United States is going to accept a commodity and use it as money when other forms of currency are available.

But that is not the case, and it will not be the case, in the Philippine Islands for a great many years, in my judgment. The native inhabitants are ignorant; they do not know anything about the new currency; they are only familiar with the Mexican currency now in circulation there, and the Americans will use stable money to their own advantage. The Philippine Commission may fix the relation between the money now in circulation in the islands and the new form of money, but the Philippine Commission can not fix the commercial relation of these two kinds of money. The value of silver will be regulated and fixed by the commercial value of silver bullion. The value of the new money will be fixed by law. It will have a value attached to it by reason of the legislation which we are proposing to enact; and Americans and others familiar with this money will take advantage of that. They will be enabled, in my judgment, to use that advantage, and, under the provisions of this bill, detrimentally to the native inhabitants of the islands.

If this bill provided that on or before a certain date the Mexican money of the islands should be surrendered and new money issued in lieu of it with some fixed relation of value, and after that date it should be unlawful for other money than that provided by this bill to circulate, and some penalty be attached to its circulation, you might have a uniformity of currency. The change will entail great hardship and undoubtedly great distress, because any change of the money of a people will necessarily lead to such distress.

It is the opinion of men, familiar with this subject, who testified before the Committee on the Philippines at the last session of Congress, that it would be impracticable to introduce the system which is now proposed by this bill and that it would lead to great distress and hardship in the islands. I simply desired to call attention to these facts without wishing to delay the final passage of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20, 23, 27, 28, 33, 39, 40, 43, 44, 45, and 46.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 40, 42, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "appointed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisted;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 6 and 7 of said amendment strike out the following: "as military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following proviso: ": Provided, That all volunteer officers now in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment shall be mustered out on June 30, 1904, and their places be filled by detail from the line of the Army: Provided further, That any vacancy now existing or which may occur between now and June 30, 1904, shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive, of said amendment, and at the end of said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That not more than $40,000 of the above appropriation shall be expended at any one post or station;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen;" and after the word "million," in line 20, page 29 of the bill, insert the words "five hundred thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Your committee of conference report a disagreement on amendment numbered 3.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
J. V. QUARLES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
A. B. CAPRON,
JAMES HAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RUMPLE.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to give notice that on Saturday next, at a convenient hour to the Senate, I shall call up the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of the late Representative JOHN N. W. RUMPLE, of Iowa.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE TONGUE.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to give notice that on Saturday, the 28th instant, I shall ask the Senate to suspend business at some convenient hour for the consideration of the House resolutions on the death of my late colleague in that body, Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, in order that fitting tributes may be paid to his memory.

HAWAIIAN DITCH COMPANY.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11997) granting to the Hawaiian Ditch Company, Limited, the right of way over public lands in the districts of North and South Kohala, in the island of Hawaii, for the purpose of constructing and maintaining ditches or canals and the necessary reservoirs, dams, and the like, for irrigation and domestic purposes in said districts.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON]. I do not think it will lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that note was made at the desk of the fact that there are two or three Senators who desire to be present when this bill is taken up.

Mr. LODGE. That bill can not go through by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill retains its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL. I give notice that I shall move at some proper time, and at no distant hour, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of what is known as the sundry civil appropriation bill, and that the regular order may be laid aside informally for that purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was addressing the Chair when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] was making his request, and I addressed the Chair three or four times before that request was put. I wanted to say that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] gave notice that he would call up and ask for the disposition of the Post-Office appropriation bill to-day. It will only take a few moments; and it seems to me it is in the interest of the public business to dispose of that bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield for that purpose, if it will take but a few minutes. I understand that the sundry civil bill is before the Senate, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The sundry civil bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Iowa will yield for that purpose, I will ask that the sundry civil bill be temporarily laid aside, so that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield; but I shall reserve the right to call up the sundry civil appropriation bill if the debate on the Post-Office appropriation bill is prolonged.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, do I understand that the Post-Office appropriation bill is before the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. The sundry civil appropriation bill has been taken up, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has agreed to yield for a time, so that the Post-Office appropriation bill may be disposed of, with the understanding that it will not take too long.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill, the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside for that purpose. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. MASON. I desire to offer an amendment as a new section to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois would it not be well first to dispose of the committee amendments?

Mr. MASON. Have not all the committee amendments been disposed of?

Mr. LODGE. No; the statehood amendment has not been disposed of.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to withdraw the first committee amendment known as the omnibus statehood bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me, I wish to perfect a committee amendment already adopted, on page 64, which we discussed this morning in committee.

Mr. MASON. Very well.

Mr. LODGE. On page 64, at the end of line 25, I move the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the clause making appropriations "for inland transportation by railroad routes," on page 64, line 25, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "and no deficiency shall be created in this appropriation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer as an additional section. The amendment which I offer has been known before the committee, and has been somewhat discussed here, as the Burrows amendment, having been offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The Acting Postmaster-General has sent me a communication in reference to the amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois will first be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as a new section:

Provided, That hereafter all periodical publications entered to the second class of mail matter, when deposited for local delivery by letter carriers, shall be subject only to the pound rate of postage, to be prepaid, as that rate is now prepaid.

All acts or parts of acts in conflict with this provision are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now read the letter of the Acting Postmaster-General.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1903.

Hon. W. E. MASON,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, inclosing a provision of law proposed to be enacted, whereby periodical publications entered to the second class of mail matter and deposited for local delivery by carriers in any post-office shall be subject only to the pound rate of postage, to be prepaid as that rate is now prepaid, etc. You say that your committee has already voted in favor of it, but you ask if the amendment meets my approval.

In reply, I have the honor to say that under the existing statutes weekly publications have this favored rate, that is to say, the publisher of a weekly publication is entitled to mail at the pound rate of postage copies of his publication addressed for local delivery by letter carrier. No publication of any other period of issue has this exceptional privilege which is now proposed to be extended to all. Under existing law, all copies of publications, excepting weeklies when addressed for local delivery by carrier, are subject to postage of 1 cent each on all newspapers and periodicals not exceeding 2 ounces in weight, and 2 cents on periodicals exceeding 2 ounces in weight, and these rates must be prepaid with stamps affixed.

It is my opinion that it is unfair to single out publications of one period of issue and discriminate in favor of them as against all others, as does the present law in favor of weeklies. However, in the short space of time given me, I am unable to estimate what effect the proposed change of rate will have upon the postal revenues, and upon the service in general; but from such investigation as I have been able to make I am convinced that the effect will be far-reaching and much greater than is supposed. On that account I can not at this time recommend that the proposed provision be enacted into law.

I have the honor to be, respectfully, yours,

R. J. WYNNE,
Acting Postmaster-General.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is clearly a matter of general legislation and very important legislation. So I make that point of order on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not interfere with this matter and that he will give us an opportunity to secure a full and fair hearing. I hope the Senator will let me state the circumstances of the case.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MASON. The situation, Mr. President, is this: A large class of periodicals published in this country are unfairly dealt with by the law which compels their publishers to prepay the postage when they mail their periodicals for delivery in a town having letter carriers, unless it be a weekly publication. If it is published once a week or once a month, as nearly all the fraternal papers are published, it has not the same advantage that the weekly paper has, and the fraternal papers in this country representing the different societies—the Masons, the Odd Fellows, the Ancient Order of United Workmen, the Knights of Pythias, and numberless orders of that kind—publish their periodicals monthly, and some of them once in three months. The United Fraternal Associations met here in Washington some few weeks ago, visited the Postmaster-General, and came with a Senator and Representative to me, as the chairman of the Post-Office Committee, saying in substance what is contained in the letter of the Acting Postmaster-General, that the law as it stands is very unfair, and that they would recommend this change.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had, Mr. President, a large number of letters concerning this matter, and I have some knowledge of the fraternal societies of this country. I want to ask the Senator at this point—because I may have to leave the Chamber—why the Postmaster-General has discriminated against these publications and has permitted the weekly publications to be admitted to the mails on more favorable terms?

Mr. MASON. It is a matter of law and not of the discretion of the Postmaster-General. We are seeking to amend the law upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, except that in the last communication which I have had read, the Postmaster-General reiterated the proposition that the law was unfair and that it ought to be amended; but he said at the same time that by reason of the fact that he had not been able to make an estimate as to the effect it would have upon the revenues of the Post-Office Department he did not recommend the passage of the amendment at this time.

Since that meeting of the committee the Senate has passed a resolution asking for an estimate by the Department, to be furnished as soon as and as accurately as may be, stating the effect upon the revenues of the Post-Office Department provided these biweekly and monthly papers should be admitted on the same terms as the weekly publications. The Postmaster-General has not had time to make the estimate, as the resolution only passed the Senate a day or two ago.

My thought was this: I do not desire to delay this bill, I am anxious that it shall get through so as to make way for other appropriation bills, but I do not wish to abandon that principle until after we have the estimate of the Postmaster-General. I will state to the committee and to the Senate that this amendment can go upon the bill, and if the Postmaster-General reports to us within the next two or three days, or at any time before Congress adjourns, that he thinks it unwise to pass the legislation for the reason that it would create a deficiency, then, if it becomes absolutely necessary, I shall be willing to join with the conferees on the bill and abandon the amendment in committee of conference so as to secure the passage of the bill.

I hope, therefore, the Senator from Iowa will withdraw the point of order, just simply that we may receive the estimate before we finally act upon this very important matter. There are 6,000,000 readers of these fraternal papers in the country who are greatly prejudiced by the present law—not by the Postmaster-General, for the matter is absolutely outside of his discretion so far as this particular point is concerned.

I will state to the Senator from Iowa that I will move in conference to take the amendment off the bill if the Postmaster-General finds that it will create such a deficiency in revenues as to constrain him not to recommend it at this time. Otherwise, I should like to keep the bill open for amendment until I can get an answer to the resolution which has been sent to the Department. I do this because I feel an interest in it on account of the great number of people who have asked for it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I regret very much that I can not withdraw the point of order. This is a very important question, respecting what printed matter shall go into the mails at the 1-pound rate, so called. I was a member of the committee when it considered that question very carefully some years ago. This second-class matter is a very great expense to the Government, and when the rates are modified they should be modified by the most careful legislation. As this has been the rule for many years, the matter can certainly go over until the next session, when the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will have two years in which to consider this legislation. I therefore insist on the point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I suppose the amendment is subject to the point of order, inasmuch as it has not been recommended by the Department for the reason the communication states.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The present occupant of the chair understands the President pro tempore to have sustained the point of order.

Mr. MASON. I may ask to have the bill continued until we can hear from the Postmaster-General, for I think it is only fair that we should have all the facts in the case.

I next ask to add to the bill as a new section the amendment which I send to the desk. I will state briefly the purpose of the amendment. It is what was originally known as the Nelson bill, and provides that the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, may have letter carriers appointed in towns and cities of 5,000 inhabitants where the postal income amounts to $5,000. It leaves it in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and changes the limit from 10,000, as at present, to 5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

That letter carriers shall be employed for the free delivery of mail matter, as frequently as the public business may require, at every incorporated city, village, or borough containing a population of 50,000 within its corporate limits, and may be so employed at every place containing a population of not less than 5,000 within its corporate limits, according to the last general census, taken by authority of State or United States law, or at any post-office which produced a gross revenue for the preceding fiscal year of not less than $5,000: Provided, That this act shall not affect the existence of the free delivery in places where it is now established: And provided further, That in offices where the free delivery shall be established under the provisions of this act such free delivery shall not be abolished by reason of decrease below 5,000 in population or $5,000 in gross postal revenue, except in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this matter was referred to the Postmaster-General, and he reported that the proposed amendment was meritorious in every particular. He also furnished an estimate, which showed that there would be 919 offices to be served if this amendment were adopted, and that the cost the first year would be $1,378,000, and the cost the second year $2,000,000. The rural free delivery covers everything below these cities and towns, and the city free delivery practically covers everything above them. This amendment proposes to change the limitation of the present law from 10,000 to 5,000.

I think, Mr. President, that it is a wise thing to do; I think it is a judicious thing to do. The committee was divided in opinion about it. It is a mere question of expense. There is no doubt that it would give a service where it is reasonable that there should be one, and where such service is not now supplied either by what is known as city delivery or by the rural free delivery. It is a mere question of whether the Senate at this time thinks it advisable to enter on the increased expenditure. I think myself that it is a proper amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I originally introduced the bill from which this amendment is taken, and my impression is that the Post-Office Department at that time was favorable to the proposition.

The present law provides that the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, give letter-carrier service in towns having a population of 10,000 or a gross income from post-office receipts of $10,000. This amendment proposes to change that, so that they can have free carrier service in towns with a population of 5,000 and with a gross postal income of $5,000. It leaves it wholly discretionary with the Postmaster-General to apply it. The provision is not mandatory at all.

We have extended the rural free delivery to the people of the country so that in the older settled portions of the country they practically have, or will have in the near future, free carrier service almost at the door of every citizen. There is a gap unfilled in this matter of mail-carrier service between the towns of 10,000 inhabitants and the little fourth-class post-offices from which free rural delivery routes emanate. There is no reason why the people of these smaller towns, towns with 5,000 population or with a gross postal income of $5,000, should not have the same facilities for getting their mail that they have in the country.

I think the principle is eminently just; and when it comes to a matter of this kind the question of expense ought not to cut any more figure in cases of the smaller towns than in the case of the free rural delivery.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I do not care to debate this question, as in my judgment it is not necessary to do so; but the figures which I have received do not correspond with those given by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I am informed that 1,000 new offices will be established at once; that each office will require an average of two and one-half mail carriers; that the second year the carriers will get $860, or about $2,000,000 in all, and that every year thereafter they will receive an additional hundred dollars. The committee considered this proposition and rejected it. I raise the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MASON. This amendment is taken from a bill which has been favorably reported to the Senate by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The amendment is a verbatim copy of the bill as reported by the committee. So I do not think the point of order will lie. The amendment exactly as it has been offered here has been passed by the Senate in the form of a bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this amendment is in the nature of an amendment that has been recommended by a standing committee of the Senate. It has always been the practice here in the Senate when an amendment on a given subject is offered, embodying a bill which has heretofore passed this body, to treat it as if the amendment had been moved or recommended by some one of its committees. For that reason the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the amendment is subject to a point of order on the ground that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator in charge of this bill that I wish to submit some remarks and that I shall not take more than ten or fifteen minutes of the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. MASON. I yield to the Senator for his remarks, but the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] has asked the privilege of offering an amendment, and I want the Senator from Maryland to understand that after the Senator from Georgia has finished he may offer it.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, an examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 17, 1893, shows that the Post-Office appropriation bill was pending in the House of Representatives, and when an item for free-delivery service, including existing experimental free-delivery offices, of $11,254,943 was reached, Hon. T. E. Watson, who was then a member of the House of Representatives from Georgia, introduced the following amendment:

For free-delivery service, including existing experimental free-delivery offices, $11,254,943, of which sum $10,000 shall be applied, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, to experimental free delivery in rural communities other than towns and villages.

Further examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows the following colloquy to have taken place between members:

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WATSON. This reduces the expenditure provided for in the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I desire to reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order has already been reserved.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph under consideration provides for the expenditure of $11,254,943 for free-delivery service. My amendment reduces the amount of that expenditure and simply directs that the Postmaster-General shall apply $10,000 of the appropriation to experimental free delivery in rural communities.

Mr. LOUD. That is already provided for; the gentleman will accomplish nothing by his amendment.

Mr. WATSON. It is not provided for in rural districts other than towns and villages. There is no experimental service in rural communities other than towns and villages.

Mr. BUCHANAN of New Jersey. You mean "truly rural."

Mr. WATSON. Yes, sir; the real country.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is some misapprehension as to the law on this subject. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina in charge of this bill what the existing law is?

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. There is no law on the subject providing for rural free delivery or experiments in that direction. There is a law which provides for experiments in small towns and villages, and 48 of these now have free delivery. That condition is preserved in this bill, but no provision is made for rural free delivery.

Mr. WATSON. The present law provides for an experimental delivery in rural communities; but as I understand it—and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON], makes the same statement to the House—the law has been construed to mean cities, towns, and villages, and there are now in operation experimental free deliveries in certain towns and villages.

The law expressly provides for rural communities, and it seems to me where the general laws make such provision there is no hardship in taking a small amount from the appropriation, only $10,000, and appropriating it for experimental free delivery in absolutely rural communities; that is to say, in the country pure and simple, amongst the farmers, in those neighborhoods where they do not get their mail more than once in every two weeks, and where these deserving people have settled in communities one hundred years old and do not receive a newspaper that is not two weeks behind the times.

The amendment was adopted by a vote of 79 yeas to 41 nays. Mr. Watson introduced his amendment to experiment in the free rural delivery service, carrying $10,000 for this purpose, less than ten years ago, which, from the best information I have been able to obtain, carried the first appropriation ever made by Congress for rural free delivery.

Mr. Wanamaker had tried what he called free delivery in towns and villages, but the experiment had not been made for free delivery of country mails. Who would have thought that the good work begun by this distinguished Georgian ten years ago would have grown to such magnitude in so short a period of time? When this amendment was introduced the public mind had not grasped the importance of this subject, and few comprehended the great good that would flow from this humble beginning in so short a period.

In 1897 the appropriation grew to $40,000, and only 44 routes were in operation. In 1898 the appropriation was increased to $50,000, and 148 routes were established. In 1899 the appropriation was increased to $150,000, and the routes had grown to 391. In 1900 $450,000 was appropriated for this purpose, and the number of routes increased to 1,276. In 1901 $1,750,000 was appropriated, and the routes had increased to 4,301. And in 1902 $3,993,740 was appropriated for the same purpose, and the routes laid off and put in operation had increased to 8,476.

On November 1 11,650 routes had been established, and the carriers engaged in taking the mails to the farmers traveled 275,000 miles of country roads to serve about 7,000,000 of the strictly rural population of the United States. The area covered by these routes is fully 300,000 square miles. The popular demand for the further extension of this service has been so great as to force Congress to appropriate $12,000,000 during the present session to further extend this service. There is no reason to expect a decrease in this popular demand for rural free delivery until all available sections of the country have been covered by the service.

Wherever this service has been established there has been a sturdy and healthy increase in the gross receipts of the post-offices in the locality in which free delivery has been put in operation, and there has also been large increase in the revenues, and in all probability when the system is thoroughly established the increased receipts will more than meet the increased expenditures.

The popular demand and the marvelous growth of this great work demonstrate that the farmers are benefited by the service. On July 1, 1901, 4,301 free-delivery routes were in operation, and during the year 4,165 routes were established, an average of 347 a month. The service practically doubled in twelve months. On July 1, 1901, 10,243 petitions had been filed with the Post-Office Department asking for free rural-delivery routes. During the year 1902, 12,403 additional petitions were filed.

Thus it will be seen that the number of petitions received during this last year exceeded by over 2,000 the total number filed heretofore. This is the highest evidence of the increasing popularity of rural free delivery and shows a universal desire from the people for the completion of the service throughout the country. The report of the Postmaster-General shows that from the beginning the demand for the service has far exceeded the ability of the Department to establish it, and that since July 1, 1902, about 2,400 petitions have been received—about 600 per month. The demands are growing every day for the completion of the service.

The Postmaster-General informs us that the requests for this service are usually accompanied by the expressed expectation of the petitioners that the routes will be established at once. Nothing short of immediate action by the Department satisfies them. They know their neighbors are enjoying the service, and can not understand why it is not extended to them at once. He further tells us in his report that every part of the country is clamorous for this service; and from those sections where the least interest was formerly manifested, and the people, from a lack of proper understanding of the matter, seemed loath to accept the benefits of free rural delivery, and were even antagonistic to it, the demands for the service and importunity for prompt action are now perhaps the greatest.

Well has the Postmaster-General said that free rural delivery is no longer in the experimental stage, but has become an established fact. Experiments thus far made have been most satisfactory, and its adoption as a permanent feature of postal administration is assured. Reports show conclusively that the value of isolated farms have been enhanced because of the service. Farmers have been brought in close touch with the markets by receiving their mails daily.

The social and educational benefits conferred by the mail being brought daily to the farmer's home are incalculable. The city and the country are brought into close connection and the farmer is somewhat relieved from the monotony of rural life and given an equal opportunity to keep abreast with his neighbor in the city.

It has been estimated that the territory of the United States available for rural free delivery embraces about a million square miles, or about one-third of the country's area, excluding Alaska. The routes now in operation cover a little more than 300,000 square miles, so that almost one-third of the available territory has already been provided with the service. Within the next three years the service can be completed, and there should be no halt in this work, for the people are demanding it with earnestness, and the sooner the service is completed the more quickly will the effect of its influence be felt upon the postal revenue.

Should the extension of the service hereafter be made at the rate of 12,000 routes per year until it becomes universal, within the next three years the work will be completed. Then nearly 20,000,000 farmers who heretofore have been given little opportunity to enjoy the benefits of daily mail facilities will receive their mails daily and country life will be relieved of isolation, and the farmer will be put upon an equal footing with his city neighbor.

The farmer will receive more direct benefit from the $24,000,000 annually appropriated to carry on the system after completed than he has received heretofore from the vast sums appropriated annually to defray the expenses of the Government. Country life will become more attractive, the farmers will keep in daily touch with the events of importance transpiring, daily newspapers will find their way into the country homes, all classes will be brought into close touch with each other, the farmer will be quick to avail himself of every opportunity to improve his condition, to take advantage of the new and improved methods of the cultivation of the farm, to make home life interesting and attractive, and such methods will tend to make our sons content with rural farm life. Mr. Jefferson said:

The cultivators of the earth are the most valuable citizens. They are the most vigorous, the most independent, the most virtuous, and they are tied to their country and wedded to its liberty and interests by the most lasting bonds.

The distinguished Georgian who introduced the first resolution which was adopted providing for an appropriation of $10,000 to experiment looking forward to this great work, had spent his boyhood days upon a farm; he knew the disadvantages under which the farmer labored in regard to his mail facilities.

He not only knew of the disadvantages under which the farmer labored, but sought most diligently to inaugurate a system that would bring to the farmer the relief he so much sought and deserved. The amendment, though small, was bitterly opposed, and at one time was likely to meet with defeat, but through the energy and well-directed efforts of the author it was finally adopted. Thus was laid the foundation for the great work, which will, when completed, be the greatest blessing the American farmer has ever received at the hands of Congress from the public Treasury. It is a source of gratification to me, and to the people of Georgia, to give proper credit to this distinguished Georgian for the work he performed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia before he leaves the floor if he can inform the Senate how nearly self-supporting is the present rural free-delivery service?

Mr. CLAY. I do not think the report of the Postmaster-General gives any accurate information which would authorize me to answer the question. The Postmaster-General assures us in his report that where the service has been established and put in thorough operation the revenues have increased from 20 to 25 per cent, and says that in a few years after the service is perfected in all probability it will be self-sustaining. There are not sufficient facts and figures in the report of the Postmaster-General up to this time to answer accurately the question asked by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I have been much interested in the Senator's statement of the development of the rural free-delivery service, because it is a service in which I have taken considerable interest from its early experimental days. As the honorable Senator has shown, it has justified in the fullest degree the hopes and expectations of its authors. It has occurred to me that there is reasonable opportunity for increasing its efficiency and without any additional burden upon the Government.

Everybody recognizes the very great convenience and benefit of the special-delivery service in many cities throughout the country. That service has thoroughly vindicated itself. It is not a burden upon the Government. In fact, it annually yields the Government a considerable profit.

It will be instructive to observe the result of the special-delivery business as set forth in the report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901. The Postmaster-General says:

The value of the special-delivery stamps used on this—matter was $713,826.30, and the amount paid for making deliveries was $542,128.01, leaving a profit to the Government on the year's business of $167,727.73, after deducting $2,657.37 expended for car fare of special-delivery messengers in emergent cases, under authority of the act of Congress of March 1, 1890, and $813.19, the cost of manufacturing the stamps.

Under authority of the act of Congress approved March 1, 1899, providing an available fund of $10,000 a year out of the revenue arising from special-delivery business for car fare of special-delivery messengers in emergent cases where immediate delivery in the usual manner is impracticable, allowances for car fare were made during the year to the amount of $2,852.75, of which $2,657.37 was actually expended.

The profit to the Government from last year's special-delivery business was $147,820.95, and from this year's special-delivery business $167,727.73; an increase of $19,906.78, or 13.46 per cent.

It has seemed to me and to others also that the farmers of the country should enjoy the benefits of that service quite as fully as those who are in more thickly settled communities. The telephone affords a medium through which it would seem that the service can be largely and properly extended. It has been so thoroughly established in many sections of the country that it can be employed readily for delivering the contents of emergent letters or letters of special importance and under such conditions as to impose no additional expense whatever upon the Government.

In many communities the farmers have their own telephones, and there would be little or no expense to the Government in the transmission of the contents of letters requiring quick delivery by telephone. Where the telephones are not open to the use of the Government without the payment of special toll, arrangement could be made by the Postmaster-General for the limited service required in the transmission of the contents of special-delivery letters upon reasonable terms. The Government should be fully reimbursed by special-delivery stamps for the particular service rendered.

The subject is of such importance that we should request the Postmaster-General to make report upon it and advise the Senate whether in his opinion any measure of rural telephone service in connection with the postal service is desirable and feasible.

It may be more accurate to designate the particular service contemplated as "special rural telephone delivery of mail matter" or "rural telephone delivery of special mail matter," a service analogous to that of special delivery in cities. In the cities messenger boys are employed to make delivery. The question arises whether similar service may not be instituted in the country, and instead of making use of messenger boys we may not make use of the telephone.

The subject is a comparatively new one; the Postmaster-General can no doubt give a valuable opinion as to whether the subject is worthy of further consideration. I do not pretend to know whether it is or not; I am strongly inclined, however, to think that it is. The whole matter obviously is in the fullest sense experimental.

I observe by the report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, that, responsive to the public necessities, the telephone has been and is being used to expedite the collection and delivery of special-delivery mail matter. The Postmaster-General says:

During the fiscal year permission was granted a number of postmasters to inaugurate at their respective offices, under certain conditions, a system of collection and delivery of special-delivery mail matter in response to telephone or other calls. The plan, which was inaugurated during the last fiscal year, is thought to be a good one, and this office will sanction its adoption at other postoffices where suitable conditions obtain and where the postmasters desire its institution.

There is in the proposition we are now considering no departure from the general principles upon which the entire postal system is founded. It is not paternalistic in its scope and purpose, unless the postal system itself is regarded as paternalistic.

It appears to me that there is a reasonable possibility to extend in a new direction a branch of the public service which verges almost upon the marvelous. Our vast and highly organized postal system is unexcelled and I doubt if it is equaled.

I shall offer a resolution, which I hope may now be considered, to obtain more light and a better opinion upon the matter than I profess to possess. As I have said before, the proposed extension of the service may be highly impracticable, and it may be that it should not be thought of further, but let us have upon the subject all attainable facts and the mature opinion of a wise and capable officer of the Government—the Postmaster-General.

I do not desire to amend the pending bill, but should like to offer for the consideration of the Senate an independent resolution.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is only a very brief one.

Mr. MASON. I understand; but I should like to finish the bill. The resolution may lead to some discussion. We have practically finished the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If it leads to any discussion I shall not press it, but will ask that it come up after the bill is passed.

Mr. MASON. All right.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think everybody will agree to the reasonableness of it. However, I will not press the resolution now, but will ask that it may be considered later.

Mr. MASON. At the conclusion of the consideration of this bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. MASON. I understand the Senator does not wish to offer it as an amendment to the bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; I expressly disclaimed any desire to do that.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. MASON. I yield to the Senator from Maryland, who has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. McCOMAS. On page 61, after line 16, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

The Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, provide for the payment of tolls on toll roads incurred by rural free-delivery carriers wherever in his opinion necessary to establish or continue the service.

Mr. McCOMAS. Is the amendment accepted by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. MASON. I am entirely satisfied with it, so far as I am concerned. I think it is only fair. It is impossible to establish rural free-delivery service upon toll roads where parties have certain rights without paying them therefor. The owner of the toll road naturally objects to giving free transit, for the reason that while the carrier is delivering the mail to perhaps a hundred persons he is thereby depriving the road of the receipts from perhaps 50 people who would ride over the road. A practice has grown up in some communities whereby the people, by voluntary contributions, donate the small amount necessary to pay the toll. But I do not think that is fair. I think the Department is willing that this should be done; and I should judge from the statement of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] that the Department approves it. It certainly strikes me as fair that where such payment is necessary, in order to continue a route or to establish one, the Government should pay the toll instead of asking those who receive the mail to pay it. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to say a word. I do not know anything about the opinion of the Department with respect to the amendment. I did not mean to say that they approved it. In many States toll roads still exist, and the purpose will be to get transit over them for nothing if the Department can. If they can not get it, then, as the chairman has well said, the fact that the company owning the turnpike will be hostile to free delivery ought not to exclude States or parts of States from the benefit of the rural delivery, and the Postmaster-General ought to have the power, where he can not get the service for nothing, to get it the best he can, that the communities may have the advantages of rural free delivery and not be excluded simply because they have turnpike roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reference to the presentation which has been made by my colleague on the origin and authorship, if I may so term it, of the free rural-delivery system. I am very much gratified that my colleague has brought forward and had reinserted in the RECORD the history of the origin and authorship of this important part of the postal system. It is true that in all great discoveries and inventions and reforms in the beginning they are in the public estimation comparatively insignificant and their importance is not then appreciated, and so while it is true that this narrative was already in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, yet at the time of the occurrence there was not an appreciation of the very great importance of the inauguration of this which has already developed into such magnitude and which promises so much for this country.

When there have been developments in these great discoveries, inventions, and reforms, after they have become the agents for great growth and development, after they have become interwoven in the business and life of the country, then it is a matter of great importance to know who it was that originated them. Hence I think it is a matter of justice to Mr. Watson that there should be now, in this day of its development and success, the recognition of the fact that the first appropriation ever made for the purpose of inaugurating the free delivery of mail in the rural districts was inserted in the House of Representatives upon the motion of this distinguished Georgian in the year 1893. It is due to him that this honor should be accorded to him, and for all time it will be to him an enduring honor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MASON. There are no further amendments to the bill, I understand, but I wish to say a word to explain why I have not presented what is known as the amendment increasing the salaries of clerks.

While I have the floor, having taken no time except that which was necessary for the transaction of business, I wish to make a statement. In my opinion the people who do the hewing of the wood and the carrying of the water in this great postal service of ours are underpaid. There is a very large class of persons drawing salaries as postmasters who possibly may be fully paid or overpaid, but the railway clerks, who stand in danger almost every minute of their lives, and many of whom go down to death in wrecks without, until within the last year, any arrangement, are underpaid. If a railway mail clerk, up to a year ago, was killed in a wreck at 12 o'clock midnight, at 12 o'clock and 1 minute his pay stopped.

I wish to express the hope that those who come after me upon the committee will be able to give to the railway mail clerks and the letter carriers, and especially the post-office clerks, proper and reasonable compensation. We have had in the service in the great city of Chicago, where expensive living is the order of the day, men who have been rearing families upon $600 a year; men who must be competent to pass the civil-service examination; men who sometimes have served as substitutes for two years, drawing sometimes as low as two or three dollars a month, and who yet must keep in touch with the Department. The result was that a few years ago in the city of Chicago, when business became good and times prosperous, it was hard to fill the positions of first-class clerks in the post-office because of the smallness of the pay.

In my effort here to increase the pay of the clerks in those offices I have been met with this proposition: It has been stated in other bodies besides this that our proposition was to increase salaries forcefully and by law, regardless of a man's merit. I deny the proposition. Our proposition has been simply that inasmuch as these men must start in in the first-class offices, as first-class clerks, must be able to fill the place, and under the law start in as low as $600 a year, their salaries ought to be increased until they reach the maximum of at least a thousand dollars a year. If under the law you would start those men where they should be started, at nine hundred or a thousand dollars a year, then possibly there might be some ground for the objection made by some upon the committee and upon this floor. But in these first-class offices in the large cities we start in a first-class clerk—competent, as is demonstrated by his examination—at a salary which does not support the man and his family.

I deny the truth of the statement that it is a forceful promotion. The contention upon the other side is that it promotes a man a hundred dollars a year whether he deserves it or not. The answer to that is that no first-class clerk living in one of the large cities of this country should be compelled to go in, pass the examination necessary to show his qualifications, and start in at five hundred or six hundred dollars a year.

Mr. President, I have done what I could fairly as chairman of this committee to secure proper compensation for the men who, as I say, bear the burden in the storm and in the hot sun day after day.

I refer to the letter carriers of the country and the rural free-delivery carriers at $500 a year or $600 a year. Each of the latter must own or control two horses and must give his own time and the time of the team for $50 a month. The result has been that many men have had to quit the service. Many men have had to receive contributions, for it has been the usual and customary thing for the farmers of the country to say to the carrier, "We know that you do not receive enough to feed your team." Yet every attempt made to advance the pay of the men who stand behind the guns—that is, the men who do the labor, like the carriers—is met by the proposition that they ought to be under the civil service, and that there ought to be no promotion until it is recommended by some superior officer.

My proposition is that no man should be employed by this Government to do responsible labor unless he is given a fair salary that will equip him sufficiently in the neighborhood where he resides and where his family must be educated.

I will say, Mr. President, at the close of the consideration of this bill I hope that those who succeed me will be more successful—I do not believe they can be more faithful—in making an endeavor to equalize the money spent by the Government of the United States in the transmission of the mails; and that the postal clerks and the letter carriers, and especially the rural free-delivery carriers, should be taken care of in the next appropriation bill by some fixed law better than they have been taken care of for the past few years.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an objection to the amendment which commences on page 75 of the bill. The ostensible purpose of the amendment is to punish train robberies and attempted train robberies. Has that amendment been before the Senate, I will ask the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MASON. It has been before the Senate. It is a matter which was referred to a subcommittee of lawyers on the Post-Office Committee, but I shall be glad to hear any suggestion the Senator has to make which will more nearly perfect the bill. Of course the purpose is to protect the people against the robbing of mail trains.

Mr. PATTERSON. In the loose language of the section it is perfectly apparent to me that it may be made the subject of great hardship and injustice to men who have no idea of committing crime.

Mr. MASON. We had the matter under discussion and thought we had perfected the amendment. It was only intended to cover those who are attempting to interfere with the mails.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think if the Senator from Illinois will pay attention to the language he will realize that the dangers they attempted to avoid have not been avoided. It is an amendment to an act for the suppression of train robbery, approved July 1, 1902. That act related simply to the suppression of train robbery in the Territories of the United States and, I think, the District of Columbia. This amendment makes it applicable to every section of the United States. That is the understanding of the Senator from Illinois, is it not?

Mr. MASON. Oh, yes; it is intended to cover every section of the country.

Mr. PATTERSON. The language of the amendment, in my opinion, makes it quite possible that any person who will interfere with a train carrying the mail, whatever his purpose might be, shall be punished by imprisonment for twenty years in the penitentiary and a very heavy fine. I call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the language.

That if any person shall willfully and maliciously arrest the passage—

"Arrest the passage." Now, passing over the language that intervenes—with the intent to interfere with or rob the mails on said train.

By way of illustration, in a time of labor troubles, if some person should arrest the passage of a train that happened to carry the United States mail, he might be indicted and tried and punished and sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for having done that single act.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I can not see how that construction can be possibly placed upon it, for any such trouble as that would not be an attempt to "arrest the passage or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive carrying the mails within the United States with the intent to interfere with or rob the mails."

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; "with the intent to interfere." Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois. The intent with which a thing is done is to be determined from the act itself, and in case of an indictment I think a jury would be so instructed. If a person willfully and deliberately arrests a train carrying United States mail then a court or jury would be permitted to conclude that it was so arrested with intent to interfere with the mail—that is, with intent to stop the passage of the mail to its destination. There is no question about that in the world. I have no objection to saying that where a man or a body of men, whether it was in the course of a labor strike or not——

Mr. MASON. I call the Senator's attention to the words in the first line which he read. A change was made in the first line so that it reads now "any person who shall." I call the Senator's attention to the words "willfully and maliciously."

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly, if any person shall arrest the passage of a train carrying the mail he does it willfully.

Mr. MASON. Not maliciously.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; he does it willfully. He stops the train.

Mr. MASON. Not with malice.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know; that is always a question. You can not determine whether a thing is done maliciously or not except as you determine it from the act itself. The word "maliciously" is applied to interference with the mail. If anyone will willfully and maliciously arrest the passage—that is, stop the movement—of a train carrying United States mail, with the intent to interfere with that mail, then he has committed the offense. When he stops the train he has interfered with the mail. If he has stopped the train deliberately, he has stopped the train willfully with intent to interfere with the mail, because the train is carrying the mail, and he intended to stop the train and therefore he intended to interfere with the mail.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PATTERSON. In just one moment. I am inclined to think, Mr. President, that some person, other than Senators, has cunningly caused this language to be inserted in this section. It should not pass. It should not be adopted by the Senate in this form. I have suggested language which will cure the evil, and if my suggestions are accepted I will not make the point of order against the amendment; but unless they are I will make the point of order that I imagine will strike it out of the bill.

This is the amendment I would like to have made. In the twenty-third line strike out the words "interfere with or;" so that the paragraph will read:

Any person who shall willfully and maliciously arrest the passage or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive carrying the mails within the United States, with the intent to rob the mails on said train or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said train or car, etc.

Then, in addition to that, I move to strike out, on page 76, in lines 5, 6, and 7, the words "or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit any crime or offense."

That, it seems to me, improves the section, and will make it perfectly clear that it is intended to affect those who stop trains for felonious purposes, and will prevent it from being distorted so that it will be made to apply to those whom I am satisfied the committee never intended should it apply to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure that the purpose of the committee in adopting this provision of the bill was to carry out only the object which the Senator says will be satisfactory to him. This section, if the Senator will permit me, was discussed at considerable length in the committee, and it was the desire of the committee to so word the section that it would confine its operation entirely to attempts to rob or otherwise interfere with the mail.

I concede that the contention of the Senator has considerable force in it. I understand that ordinarily in the interpretation of criminal statutes the intent will be inferred from the act. It was the purpose and desire of the committee to avoid any such language and to make it so strong and explicit that the intent of the violator of the law would be the essence of the offense.

Ordinarly I think that langurge would cover it, but for the purpose of making it entirely explicit, and to preclude the idea that the statute was meant to describe an offense without the element of intent, I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from Colorado ought to be accepted, and I hope the chairman will accept it.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from North Carolina who has just spoken was on the subcommittee that prepared this amendment, and I feel like yielding to his judgment and accepting the amendment. I am perfectly clear as to the first amendment, but I ask the Senator kindly to read the second amendment on page 76. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will read the amendment and then call the attention of the Senator to almost identical language in a previous part of the section, and if it means less it ought not to be in the section. The language I want to strike out on page 76 is in lines 5, 6, and 7, and is as follows——

Mr. MASON. "Or who"——

Mr. PATTERSON (reading)—

Or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit any crime or offense.

That is as far as it is necessary to strike out in order to make the meaning complete.

Now, there is almost identical language on page 75 with that I have just read, as follows:

Or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence.

Now, that ought to remain, but the language given, "or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit any crime or offense," ought to go out, because, unless the intent is to commit murder, robbery, or unlawful violence, there ought to be no offense cognizable by the Federal courts.

Mr. MASON. That is right. Now read the paragraph just as it will read when amended.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will read it just as it will read with the amendments I propose:

That if any person shall willfully and maliciously arrest the passage or or enter upon any railroad train, railroad car, or railroad locomotive carrying the mails within the United States, with the intent to rob the mails on said train or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger on said train or car, or upon or against any engineer, conductor, firemen, brakemen, or any officer or employee connected with said locomotive, train, or car, or upon or against any mail agent or express messenger on said train, or in any such car thereof, such person shall be punished by imprisonment not exceeding twenty years, or by fine not exceeding $5,000, or both, at the discretion of the court.

In addition to the words I have mentioned on page 76, you want to strike out also the words "against any person or property thereon."

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the Senator desires to shift the burden. As the bill now stands the Senator thinks that upon proving the act of arresting the train or entering upon the train the law would infer the intent. That is my understanding.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, it might. It depends altogether on the circumstances.

Mr. SIMMONS. If that were true, then the defendant might exonerate himself by showing that he did not have that intent. Now, the Senator's purpose, as I understand it, is to shift the burden and require the State to prove an intent as an element of the offense.

Mr. PATTERSON. No, I do not want to say that that is my purpose. I believe the provision will be all right if it makes criminal the willfully and maliciously arresting the passage of a train with the intent to rob the mails of said train, or to commit murder, robbery, or any unlawful violence upon or against any passenger or other person.

Now, that ought to be an offense; but the language of the first part of the section and the language near the close of the section makes it entirely possible for persons to be punished with this very severe punishment who in reality had no intent to rob the mail or interfere with the mail beyond the extent of, for the time being, interfering with its free passage.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I understand the position of the Senator. It was the will of the committee with reference to it to limit this offense entirely to attempts to rob or interfere with the mail.

Mr. MASON. I am entirely satisfied with the amendment, if it meets the views of my colleague on the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the vote by which this amendment was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 23, after the words "intent to," strike out "interfere with or;" and after the word "thereof," on page 76, line 5, strike out "or who in pursuance of such intent attempts to commit any crime or offense against any person or property thereon."

Mr. MALLORY. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that, after the word "passage," in line 21, page 75, the word "of" ought to be inserted.

Mr. PATTERSON. So as to read:

Arrest the passage of or enter upon.

Mr. MASON. I will accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. That closes the bill, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON. I ask that the bill may be printed as amended.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill will be printed in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is always printed in the House when sent over.

Mr. MASON. Very well; I withdraw the request.

POSTAL TELEPHONE SERVICE.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Indiana if his resolution does not give rise to debate.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it will not.

Mr. ALLISON. If it does, I shall reserve the right to ask that it lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read to the Senate.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to inform the Senate to what extent and in what manner the telephone is used in the collection and delivery of special-delivery mail matter; and whether in his opinion special rural telephone delivery of mail matter is desirable and feasible.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the concurrent resolution of the House accepting the invitation of the committee of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held at St. Louis in 1903.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the second report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, and 8 to the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States or are totally disabled in the same.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the second report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 to the bill upon which the committee of conference were unable to agree, and agrees to the same.

The message also announced that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 39 and 41, and so much of amendment numbered 57 as relates to the striking out of section 13 of the bill and substituting matter in lieu thereof to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, upon which the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the enrolled bill (S. 5718) providing for the sale of sites for manufacturing or industrial plants in the Indian Territory, from which the signature of the Speaker has been canceled, together with the message of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to the bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 17088) to create a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Texarkana, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 159) granting to the New York and Jersey Railroad Company the right to construct and operate an underground railway under land owned by the United States in the city of New York.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the sundry civil appropriation bill be now proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be considered as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Under the Treasury Department," on page 3, after line 3, to insert:

For the erection of an addition to the quarters now occupied by the subtreasury at Baltimore, Md., in the space between the present old court-house and the post-office and court-house building, and for changes in connection therewith, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 15, to increase the appropriation for rent of buildings at Cleveland, Ohio, from $49,279 to $52,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 2, to insert:

For extending the two wings at the east and west ends of the present main building, connecting such wings across the north side by a steel, glass, and copper construction (similar in design to the cover of porch at present on the south side of the building), and rebuilding as a permanent building the temporary building now being constructed as an addition to one of the waiting rooms, all substantially in accordance with the plans submitted by the Supervising Architect to the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under date of November 24, 1902, the extensions of such wings to be of substantially the same construction as the present wings, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and eighty" and insert "seven hundred and thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For construction of a new island near Ellis Island, $150,500; in all, $730,500, which sum shall be paid out of the immigrant fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the provision in line 22, on page 7, "for construction of a new island near Ellis Island." Is it the intention of the committee to have the language stand in that way?

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to constructing a new island provided jurisdiction over it shall be given to New Jersey. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. That is the phraseology employed by the House of Representatives, and I think it is intended to add a new island in New York Harbor. So far as I know that is the purpose. I will, however, look into the matter a little further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate should strike out one word, the clause would then be open for action in the conference committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I will move to strike out the words "a new" before the word "island" and insert the word "an;" so as to read:

For the construction of an island near Ellis Island, etc.

I will say, however, that the entire clause will be in conference by the amendment already agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be agreed to, in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, after line 20, to insert:

Wilmington, N. C.: For repairs to the wharf purchased under the provisions of the act approved June 28, 1902, for revenue and customs purposes, the sum of $2,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for such purchase is authorized to be used by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 5, to insert:

For additional amount necessary to complete the buildings for laboratory for the Marine-Hospital Service, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quarantine stations," on page 26, after line 4, to insert:

Portland, Me., quarantine station: For purchase of site, erection of buildings, and equipment of station, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 7, to insert:

Reedy Island, Delaware River, quarantine station: For coal bunkers for boarding steamer, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to insert:

Gulf quarantine station: For repairs and alterations to steamer Welch, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 2, to insert:

San Diego, Cal., quarantine station: For quarters and bath house and improvements to station, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Light-houses, beacons, and fog signals," on page 27, after line 10, to insert:

Boon Island light and fog-signal station, Maine: For establishing a fog signal at Boon Island light station, Maine, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 13, to insert:

State Ledge light and fog-signal station, Massachusetts: For establishing a light and fog-signal station at or near State Ledge, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, $52,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 17, to insert:

Broad Sound Channel light station, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: The provision in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1903 for a first-order light and fog signal at the Northeast Grave, Boston Harbor, is hereby amended by striking out the words "the Northeast Grave" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "The Graves;" so as to read as follows: Broad Sound Channel light station, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: For constructing a first-order light and fog signal at The Graves on a granite tower, to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel in Boston Harbor, $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said light station at a total cost not exceeding $188,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 7, to insert:

Relief light vessel for the Third light-house district: For constructing, equipping, and outfitting complete for service a first-class light vessel, with steam fog signal, for the Third light-house district, $90,000; and the Light-House Board is authorized to employ temporarily at Washington three draftsmen, to be paid at current rates, to prepare the plans for said vessel when this appropriation is made, and to be paid therefrom, such employment to cease on or before the date when the plans for such vessel being finished, proposals for building same are invited by advertisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 18, to insert:

Pecks Ledge light and fog-signal station, Connecticut: For establishing a light and fog-signal station at Pecks Ledge, Norwalk Harbor, Connecticut, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 22, to insert:

Shinnecock Bay light station, New York: For establishing an electric light at Shinnecock Bay, seacoast of Long Island, New York, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

For lighting arc electric lights in public grounds as follows: For 7 in grounds south of the Executive Mansion, 32 in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks, and 14 in grounds south of Executive Mansion and in Monument Park, at not exceeding $85 per light per annum, which sum shall cover the entire cost of lighting and maintaining in good order each of said arc electric lights; in all, $4,505, one-half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. At this point I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 85, where I move to strike out the proviso embraced within lines 11 to 14, inclusive, on that page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 85 to strike out lines 11, 12, 13, and 14, as follows:

Provided, That so much of the amount hereby appropriated as may be necessary shall be available for the establishment and maintenance of the Bertillon system of identification at the various ports of entry.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, in support of the motion of the Senator from Iowa, I desire to have put in the RECORD two or three provisions of the treaty with China, which show that this proviso would come in conflict with it. In connection with those extracts I submit some very brief remarks of my own.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The Bertillon system of identification, as stated by the Assistant Commissioner of Immigration, is a system of measurements, that is, taking the measurement of the hands, feet, different parts of the body, etc.

The treaty of 1894, Article III thereof, provides exactly under what conditions Chinese officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure may come to the United States.

The provisions of this convention shall not affect the right at present enjoyed of Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but not laborers, of coming to the United States and residing therein. To entitle such Chinese subjects as are above described to admission into the United States, they may produce a certificate from their Government or the government where they last resided viséed by the diplomatic or consular representative of the United States in the country or port whence they depart.

It certainly was not contemplated by the treaty that the Bertillon system of identification should be used as to students, etc. The treaty gives Chinese teachers, etc., the right to enter freely (because they had that right under the treaty of 1868 and earlier treaties), the only condition being that they shall produce a certificate, as provided in Article III of the treaty.

It is doubtful whether the Bertillon system could even be applied to laborers, as Article II of the treaty of 1894 provides under what conditions laborers can come into the United States or return here after an absence in China.

Article I prohibits the coming of Chinese laborers into the United States, and Article II provides that Article I shall not apply to the return to—the United States of any registered Chinese laborer who has a lawful wife, child, or parent in the United States, or property therein to the value of $1,000, etc.

Nevertheless, every such Chinese laborer shall, before leaving the United States, deposit as a condition of his return with the collector of customs of the district from which he departs a full description in writing of his family or property or debts as aforesaid, and shall be furnished by said collector with such certificate of his right to return under this treaty as the laws of the United States may now or hereafter prescribe and not inconsistent with the provisions of this treaty. * * * And no such Chinese laborer shall be permitted to enter the United States by land or sea without producing to the proper officer of the customs the return certificate herein required.

Query: Would it be proper under such a treaty, which states just what the Chinaman shall do to entitle him to a certificate, to compel him to submit to the Bertillon system of identification, which was never contemplated by the treaty?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "National cemeteries," on page 131, after line 15, to insert:

Road to Antietam National Cemetery, Maryland: For the construction of a road on the Antietam battlefield on or near the present highway from the intersection of Mill street and the Antietam National Cemetery roadway, in the town of Sharpsburg, Md., to the Burnside Bridge, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 132, after line 10, to insert:

Balls Bluff battlefield: For the purchase and preservation of the battlefield of Balls Bluff, and the soldiers' burial place there, and for putting the same in suitable condition, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous objects, War Department," on page 133, line 18, before the word "public," to strike out "other;" so as to make the clause read:

Philippine Islands: For the relief of the distress in the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Philippine government in such proportions as they deem wise, in the direct purchase and distribution or sale of farm implements, farm animals, supplies, and necessaries of life, and through the employment of labor in the construction of government wagon roads and other public works, to be immediately available, $3,000,000. And the governor of the Philippines shall submit to the Secretary of War a statement of all expenditures hereunder.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 134, line 3, to increase the appropriation for the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, may be necessary, etc., from $1,250,000 to $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, after line 22, to insert:

The Presidio, Cal.: For continuing the work of improving the military reseration at the Presidio of San Francisco, and improving other military reservations in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal., by reclaiming sand dunes, planting trees and shrubs and general forestry, and other much-needed improvements, to be expended under direction of the Secretary of War, the appropriation to be available until used, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 141, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For the reconstruction and completion of the old Providence Hospital building and renovation and rearrangement of grades and approaches to the hospital and fitting up and equipping a modern morgue, $100,000; in all, $119,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Support and medical treatment of destitute patients: For the support and medical treatment of 95 medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $19,000; for the reconstruction and completion of the old Providence Hospital building, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 141, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For the erection of a building on the Garfield Memorial Hospital grounds for heating, cooking, laundry, and electric-elevator purposes and furnishing the same for use, and for the erection and furnishing of new surgical rooms with modern appliances, $100,000, to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the trustees of Garfield Memorial Hospital; in all, $119,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, under a contract to be made with the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia, $19,000; for the erection of a building on the Garfield Memorial Hospital grounds, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 142, after line 5, to insert:

Site for Army general hospital: The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to expend not exceeding $75,000 of the unexpended balance of the amounts appropriated for the construction and maintenance of hospitals by the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved June 30, 1902, for the purchase of a site for the construction of a general hospital in the vicinity of Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to:

The next amendment was, on page 143, after line 4, to insert:

For construction of one steam tug to replace the launches Active and Alert and the tug Argus, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 143, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for miscellaneous objects, War Department, from $75,260 to $120,260.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, on page 146, after line 7, to insert:

For quartermaster's storehouse and equipment, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for the Dayton (Ohio) Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from $585,600 to $645,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 146, line 25, to strike out "thirty-one" and insert "thirty-four;" so as to read:

At the Northwestern Branch, at Milwaukee, Wis.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $34,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Soldiers' Home at Milwaukee, Wis., on page 147, after line 15, to insert:

For addition to quartermaster's storehouse, with equipment, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 147, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the Northwestern Branch of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Milwaukee, Wis., from $313,700 to $325,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Soldiers' Home at Togus, Me., on page 148, after line 13, to insert:

For quartermasters' storehouse and equipment, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 148, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Eastern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Togus, Me., from $319,414 to $344,414.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Santa Monica (Cal.) Soldiers' Home, on page 51, after line 11, to insert:

For one additional barrack, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 151, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the Pacific Branch of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Santa Monica, Cal., from $341,150 to $371,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for salaries for officers and employees of the Board of Managers, and for outdoor relief and incidental expenses, on page 157, line 20, before the word "stationery" to insert "medical examinations;" so as to read:

For rent, medical examinations, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 157, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from $4,781,308 to $4,907,808.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 159, after line 2, to insert:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Purchase of wharf and adjoining land, Newport, R. I.: For the purchase by the Secretary of the Navy of a wharf and necessary adjoining land at Newport, R. I., for the use of the Army and Navy, and for the Treasury and other Departments and branches of the Government service, and for the repair and improvement of the same: Provided, That said wharf property and any improvements thereon which may hereafter be made shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Navy, $100,000.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether it is not usual in making such a purchase as that contemplated in this amendment to put in the act of Congress the addition that the jurisdiction shall have been ceded by the State. Of course you can not get it unless you get it now.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it is usual. If the Senator from Massachusetes thinks that ought to be done of course I have no objection to the amendment covering that point.

Mr. HOAR. My attention of course has been called to such matters in the case of court-houses and buildings connected with the Department of Justice. I think that is always inserted in the provision for a public building.

Mr. ALLISON. I should have no objection to it, and I think it might very well be inserted with profit.

Mr. HOAR. I will move, then, to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That jurisdiction shall have been ceded to the United States over said property by the State of Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 159, line 13, after the word "dollars," insert:

And provided further, That exclusive jurisdiction shall have been ceded to the United States over said property by the State of Rhode Island.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 159, after line 24, to insert:

For the purpose of carrying out on the part of the United States the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concluded at Washington on the 24th day of January, 1903, to become immediately available upon the exchange of ratifications of the said treaty, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, after line 5, to insert:

For compensation and expenses of a competent and reliable person, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, with the approval of the President, whose duty it shall be to carry out the recommendations in the tenth clause of the report of the Pan-American Railway committee to the Second International Conference of American States, held in the City of Mexico in the winter of 1901 and 1902, and unanimously adopted by that conference, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, after line 14, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

To commence the erection of a new building for the Department of Agriculture, authorized by the act approved February 9, 1903, $250,000, of which sum $100,000 shall be immediately available; and the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for the completion of said building within the limit of cost of $1,500,000 fixed by said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, "Under the Department of Justice," on page 164, line 21, to increase the appropriation for the care of buildings rented by the Department of Justice from $8,000 to $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," in the appropriation for United States courts, on page 166, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of section 8 of the legislative appropriation act approved May 26, 1896, limiting the compensation of United States assistant district attorney to not exceeding $2,500 per annum, shall not apply to the first assistant district attorney for the northern district of Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 17, to insert:

United States penitentiary, McNeils Island, Washington: For the construction of additional suitable buildings, prison wall, and wharf for the United States penitentiary at McNeils Island, Washington, $30,000, of which amount $7,000 may be used for the purchase of additional lands, including clay deposits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 174, after line 24, to insert:

Court of Private Land Claims: For chief justice and four associate justices, at $5,000 each: clerk, $2,000; stenographer, $1,500; attorney, $3,500; interpreter and translator, $1,500; in all, $33,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 175, after line 5, to insert:

For deputy clerks, as authorized by law, so much therefor as may be necessary: Provided, That section 19 of an act entitled "An act to establish a Court of Private Land Claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, as amended in legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1901, approved April 17, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows: "SEC. 19. That the powers and functions of the court established by this act shall cease and determine on the 30th day of June, 1904, and all papers, files, and records in the possession of the said court belonging to any other public office of the United States shall be returned to such office, and all other papers, files, and records in the possession of or appertaining to said court shall be returned to and filed in the Department of the Interior:" Provided further, That all cases now or hereafter pending in the appellate courts from the Court of Private Land Claims and all surveys connected therewith shall be expedited and given preference so far as practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under legislative," on page 176, after line 15, to insert:

Bust of late President McKinley: For the purchase by the Joint Committee on the Library of a bronze portrait bust of the late President McKinley, executed by Mrs. Emma Cadwallader-Guild, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the United States Geological Survey, under the head of "Public printing and binding," on page 179, line 24, after the word "resources," to insert "and for additional copies of such maps included in the above as may be needed for general purposes;" so as to make the clause read:

For engraving the illustrations necessary for the annual report of the Director, and for the monographs, professional papers, bulletins, water-supply papers, and the report on mineral resources, and for additional copies of such maps included in the above as may be needed for general purposes, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 180, line 8, after the words "Geological Survey," to insert:

And the Director of the Geological Survey shall hereafter distribute to public libraries that have not already received them such copies of sale publications as may remain on hand at the expiration of five years after date of delivery to the Survey document room, excepting a reserve number not to exceed 200 copies.

So as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding the annual report of the Director, the monographs, professional papers, bulletins, water-supply papers, and the report on mineral resources, $150,000; and said amount shall cover all printing and binding on account of said publications of the Geological Survey; and the Director of the Geological Survey shall hereafter, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was completed.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire, on behalf of the committee, to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 143, after line 9, to insert:

Bronze tablets at Falls of St. Marys River: To enable the Secretary of War to place bronze tablets in or near suitable positions in the masonry now occupying the site of the locks built in 1853, 1854, and 1855, in commemoration of the construction of the ship canal at the Falls of St. Marys River, in the State of Michigan, with the names inscribed thereon of the State and United States officers, contractors, engineers, and other persons immediately and officially connected with the undertaking, and including the dates, the commencement and completion of the work, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On behalf of the committee on page 133, after line 21, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 133, after line 21, to insert:

Care of civil records of the late military government of Cuba: For classification, arrangement, care, and storage of the civil records of the late military government of occupation of Cuba, including hire of clerks, messengers, and every other necessary expense in connection therewith, $11,280, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish now to turn back to page 7, and ask unanimous consent that the amendment on line 22 may be disagreed to. It had escaped my mind for the moment that the paragraph relates to the construction of a small island very near Ellis Island, in New York Harbor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish the text to stand as it came from the House.

Mr. SPOONER. If it is as agreeable to the Senator from Iowa at this time as any other, I should like to ask a question.

Mr. ALLISON. It will be agreeable unless it is one I can not answer. I will do the best I can.

Mr. SPOONER. In reading the bill I observe that $200,000 is appropriated to Liliuokalani, the ex-Queen of Hawaii. I should like to inquire whether that is in consideration of the relinquishment of any rights to the United States which she possessed or whether it is honorary. What are the facts in regard to it?

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations did not investigate this appropriation with any very great care. They were only familiar with the general facts relating to the deposition of the Queen of Hawaii. I do not understand that a committee of this body made an investigation of the subject. At any rate, I know that the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico urged very strongly upon the Committee on Appropriations that this appropriation should be made.

Mr. HOAR. They were expressly directed in the last Congress to make a thorough investigation of the subject as a committee.

Mr. ALLISON. They were so directed and did make the investigation, and they submitted an elaborate report. I am told that on the general subject of the Hawaiian Islands they have made a report which embraces some nine or ten volumes.

The appropriation is founded, of course, upon the claim, pretended or real, of the Queen to what are known as the crown lands in Hawaii. From these crown lands she received, I understand, an income annually of about $48,000, of which she was deprived; and the matter has been in contest in various ways from that time until now. I am very sorry that the chairman of the committee having special charge of this matter is not present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The chairman of the committee will be present whenever this item comes up in the Senate. He understood that a point of order was to be made, and he desired to be heard on the point of order, and the Chair said he would send for him.

Mr. ALLISON. With such imperfect statement as I have been able to make, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow the matter to lie over for further explanation by some one who is directly familiar with the topic.

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that this matter had better go over and be considered by itself, and at a later hour we can resume its consideration. I was a member of the commission which passed upon this question, and we decided against it after very complete examination. My own judgment about it is that there are others besides Liliuokalani who will come in if we have got to settle with the royal family down there. She was the representative of those interests because she became functus officio at a time when she seemed to be royal, and there was at that time a crowd of royalties around who were licking their chops to get money out of the Treasury. I think we had better look into this matter a little more carefully.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the statement of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had not been made until after the matter had gone over, I should not desire to say anything; but I should like to make a brief statement about the subject in this connection.

I myself had a very strong feeling against this lady, growing out of some newspaper reports, but a lady whom I know very well, who is the wife of one of the most eminent business men in Boston (indeed, in the country), is the cousin of the husband of this Queen. She has been for many years very intimately acquainted with the late Queen and has received her as a guest in her house. She tells me a story, which I believe the committee have found to be true. It is to the effect that these lands are lands which fairly might have been claimed to be the private property of the Queen, and not mere crown lands. Their proceeds had always been used for the private support and maintenance of the royal family.

This lady since her dethronement has done everything in her power to reconcile her people to the rule of the United States. She has publicly declared—and her declaration has great authority with those people—that the best thing which could possibly happen to that unfortunate and decaying people was that they should come under our control. Her influence has been of great value. She is a woman of great personal worth. That, of course, does not settle any legal question, but it is a fact which is known. She has used all the money she could get, living in a most self-denying, prudent, and strict manner for her, in educating the children of some of her dependents and officials about the court, who, when she was Queen, depended upon her. She brought them to this country and has spent her money for their education and support here.

Under those circumstances, there being a very fair claim for crown lands of much larger value, the fact having been that, under circumstances the history of which is known to the whole Senate, she was deposed, it does seem to be a pity that we should haggle with her about this $200,000, which, being invested in any permanent investment, would yield an income of not exceeding $8,000 a year, and more likely not so much.

I have no earthly interest in this matter except for two reasons, the interest occasioned by this story and the desire to atone, if I can in any way, for a public utterance of disrespect toward this lady that I made in Massachusetts in a Republican convention a few years ago, having been misled and deceived by what I had read in the newspapers.

I shall not, however, undertake to debate the matter, but I trust the committee will explain the situation when it again comes up. I have stated the general nature of the case.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I want to say just a word about this matter now.

I did not put the question to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] for the purpose or with a view of antagonizing this proposition. At one time I gave some examination—not being chargeable, however, by the Senate with that duty—into the claim of this lady in relation to the crown lands of Hawaii, and I came to the conclusion that the crown lands of Hawaii pertained to the crown and belonged to whomsoever the crown belonged; that they were not in any sense the private property of the individual who happened for the time being to wear the crown, but followed the sovereignty.

I have never said any disrespectful thing of this lady, and if I had spoken wrongly of her I would not ask the Government of the United States to make amends.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator certainly does not understand me to make any such contention as that?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. I said I had an interest in seeing that she should receive justice because I had once done her an injustice, and I am not ashamed of that utterance.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no interest of any kind to see that she has justice done her, except the interest I have in seeing that everybody to whom the United States is in any way beholden shall be justly dealt with.

If there is any claim upon the part of Liliuokalani to these lands as an individual, contradistinguished from the sovereign—I mean a just and fair claim, although not technically perhaps a legal claim—I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts that it should be dealt with in a broad way, but I had not supposed that we were to pay her this $200,000 on account of any wrong in her deposition and by way of damages for that; but what I wanted to know from the Senator was upon what this claim rests.

Mr. ALLISON. It rests, as I understand the committee having charge of this subject, largely upon what they call an equity in her favor arising out of the transaction with which we are all familiar.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will permit me, I will make answer to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER.]

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will wait until the Senator from Wisconsin concludes.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking for information, and I should like to hear the Senator now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state, Mr. President, that I, under direction of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, reported this amendment to the Senate and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and that committee has it incorporated into the sundry civil appropriation bill.

I will say further that the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was unanimous in recommending the adoption of this amendment, and the Committee on Appropriations without dissent has reported it for the favorable action of the Senate.

Now, to answer the Senator from Wisconsin—I agree with him thoroughly, and I am sure that I represent the views of every member of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico—it is not contended in the report made by that committee, it is expressly stated by the subcommittee of that committee, which visited the island of Hawaii last summer, that there is no legal claim upon the part of Liliuokalani against the Federal Government. She has no day in court.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin further that the fee to the crown lands, the rental of which is made the basis of this recommendation, was not in her. It was in the sovereign of those islands; but in the rents, issues, and profits arising from those crown lands she had absolute title.

Mr. SPOONER. While she was Queen.

Mr. BLACKBURN. While she was Queen. She did with those rents what she pleased, and accounted to nobody. Since her dethronement, in round numbers ten years ago, this Government has collected from those crown lands, in round numbers, $450,000, and is still collecting those rents.

I do not propose to go into a discussion of the circumstances attending the dethronement of this monarch. I do not propose to open or discuss the question as to the connection and responsibility of our people in that matter, and toward its consummation; but I apprehend, Mr. President, that there are few Senators here, if there be one, who would undertake to say that that dethronement would have occurred and a transfer of the crown lands from her as the sovereign of those islands to the exchequer of the United States Government would ever have been consummated if it had not been for the presence of the marines from the Boston and the raising of the flag of this country upon the island of Hawaii. I pretermit that question. It will do no good to bring it up here and now. This claim, if claim it be, is not a legal claim. If you are to denominate it a claim, it is purely and simply an equitable claim. It is simply a proposition submitted, not for this Senate sitting as a court to pass upon, but for this Senate to pass on upon its conscience.

I might say, according to the report made by the subcommitee that visited the island of Hawaii last summer, it would seem, unless those gentlemen were deceived and mistaken, that this would be a good investment because of the feeling of gratitude with which it would be accepted and the appreciation those people would show for this act.

I was named as one of the subcommittee that was to go to the island of Hawaii. Conditions entirely personal to myself made it impossible for me to go, but the Senator from Washington [Mr. FOSTER] was there, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] was there, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] was there, and their elaborate printed report, made to the full committee and published as a document for the use of the Senate, shows that this woman is held to-day in reverence and love by the people of all classes who live upon those islands. It shows that those people feel that this Government ought, under the conditions by which we are confronted, to do what this amendment proposes we shall do.

Nobody asserts a claim. This Government may divest itself of its sovereignty, which gives it immunity from suit, and yet in that case the ex-Queen could not go into court, for she would have no day there. She has not the foundation upon which to build a legal claim.

I repeat, this question addresses itself to the consciences of the members of this body. Before I would vote against this appropriation of $200,000 I should first want to feel prepared to assert that my Government, neither by act direct nor by indirection, was in any measure responsible for the overthrow of this woman's government, for her deposition from her royalty, and for the transfer of the property that belonged to her as such sovereign to the coffers of our common country.

This Government has collected more than twice the amount embraced in this proposed amendment. It had the right to do it. She has no legal ground upon which to enter protest or complaint. I state the facts, and leave it to the conscience of the Senate as to whether it is a proper, whether it is a humane, whether it is a just act for us to perform toward one who confesses herself helpless, but the revenues of whom we have appropriated to our own governmental purposes.

I do not know the beneficiary of this amendment. I never saw her in my life. I have no possible, conceivable interest in the fate of this amendment except as it touches on the ground of conscience. I am entirely content to have the Senate do with it as it will.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I do not rise to speak on this matter. I understood this debate was to go over.

Mr. STEWART. I simply want to make a remark on this amendment. I do not propose to make any speech.

Mr. HOAR. I rose for another purpose.

Mr. STEWART. I simply want to say with regard this amendment that I believe it commends itself to the conscience of the American people. They understand all the circumstances, and everybody with whom I have conversed thinks something ought to be done. I feel that something ought to be done, and I am glad the matter is before the Senate. I believe the Senate will act on their conscience, and that they will adopt this amendment. That is my conviction with regard to it, and I do not wish to say any more.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

For construction of wharf at United States quarantine station, Honolulu, Hawaii, $55,000; for a runway to connect wharf with the island, $10,000; for retaining wall around the island, $10,000; for laundry plant, $5,000; in all, $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 160, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of meeting the expenses on the part of the United States of the joint commission provided for in the general deficiency appropriation act approved July 7, 1898, for the adjustment of differences between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the Dominion of Canada, which it is in contemplation to reassemble at an early day, including the compensation of the commissioners representing the United States, the pay of expert service for preparation of papers, the portion of the joint expenses chargeable to the United States, and printing, and all other incidental expenses, $50,000, to be immediately available and to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, that amendment was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations and was reported to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On page 95, line 1, I move to strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five," before the word "thousand," and insert the words "four hundred." In view of the estimates, which were $500,000, I trust the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. To what does that amendment relate?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It relates to the care of forest reserves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 95, it is proposed to strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five" and insert the words "four hundred;" so as to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the protection and administration of forest reserves from $325,000 to $400,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The estimate was for $500,000, as I have stated.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the appropriation for the current year for this purpose was, I believe, $300,000. The House added to the present appropriation $25,000. I was surprised somewhat by the debate here a day or two ago, wherein it was stated that these appropriations were not large enough to suitably protect the forest preserves. I shall not object to the increase proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, but will consent to it being put in the bill in order that it may be a proper subject for conference with the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I ask that the note on page 319 of the Book of Estimates, where this matter is referred to, may be printed in the RECORD, and also a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE], which will be of value in discussing the proposition in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

The papers referred to are as follows:

[From the Book of Estimates.]

NOTE.—The forest reserve area has been recently increased about 11 per cent, which necessitates a corresponding increase in the expense of its care. Timber disposals and grazing permits have doubled since 1900, attention to which has reduced the number of men available for patrol work. This latter service was already hampered, because the force was inadequate for protection against fires and trespasses. At least one-fourth the area of the forest reserves have been necessarily left unpatrolled most of the year, while at no time has the field force been adequate in any reserve. For these and like reasons the estimate herewith submitted is deemed absolutely necessary to the proper conduct of the forestry service and the care and conservation of the important interests therein involved, present and future.

NOTE.—In this case an increase of $200,000 is asked for on the following grounds:

When in 1900 the appropriation for forest reserves was increased from $200,000 to $300,000, the total area of forest reserve was, in round numbers, 46,000,000 acres, and the work on these reserves consisted almost entirely of simple patrol duty, chiefly fire patrol. At present (September, 1902) the area of forest reserves is over 60,000,000 acres, indicating an increase of over 30 per cent, with over 8,000 acres of proposed reserves, largely withdrawn and urgently petitioned for, so that it is expected that before the present fiscal year draws to a close the forest reserve area will have increased by over 47 per cent. But even with an area of 46,000 acres, and simple duties, the appropriation of $300,000 necessitated injurious retrenchment, so that it became necessary during a large portion of each year to dismiss nearly all of the field force from most of the northern reserves, leaving about one-half of all reserves either without any, or at least without adequate, protection. Moreover, the work on most of the reserves has been increased and complicated to a considerable degree. The development of agricultural and mining interests and the adaptation of the people to reserve methods has led to extensive business relations, which have changed the patrol rangers into timber estimators, scalers, and timber inspectors, thus adding to the duties of the field force in both quantity and quality.

To illustrate: The number of cases for the free use of timber have increased from 283 in 1901 to 1,280 in 1902. Similarly the cases of sales of timber effected were 12 in 1900, 31 in 1901, and 77 in 1902. The applications for the sale of timber have increased from 75 in 1901 to 144 in 1902, and the amount involved from 26,000,000 feet to 65,000,000 feet.

In addition it should be stated that the grazing of over a million head of stock, and the examination, report, and control of a multitude of cases of special privileges of all kinds vastly increase and complicate this work. For these reasons the increase of $200,000 appears absolutely necessary if any reasonable protection is to be provided and if the vast interests of the people having business with the reserves is not to suffer from a neglect caused by want of an efficient field force.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1903.

Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE,
United States Senate.

SIR: In response to your request for a statement of the need for an increased appropriation for the protection and administration of the national forest reserves, permit me to call your attention to the following facts as additional to the statement submitted with the annual estimates asking for an increase for next year to $500,000:

When the present sum of $300,000 was appropriated, the area of the reserves to be patrolled and protected against fire and trespass amounted to only 46,000,000 acres, and the administration thereof having but just been established the amount of business other than patrol was practically nothing.

This condition has changed radically. The area to be looked after now is over 61,000,000 acres, having increased during the past year about 15,000,000 acres, with the prospect of a further large increase, there being now over 50 forest reserves.

Aside from this enormous increase in area, there has sprung up a large amount of business in the disposition of timber, grazing, and other interests. Thus, where a few years ago there were no sales of timber there are to-day several hundred cases under way, requiring the time of the field force in locating, estimating, marking, and scaling the timber and the proper supervision of the work of removal of the same. That such work can not be delayed follows from the mere fact that usually the mining and other enterprises dependent upon the supply of timber sought are so located that importation of the material from other localities is impossible.

Experience has shown that the present appropriation is inadequate for even mere patrol service of the area for which it was first provided; that with $300,000 it was necessary to leave large reserves without any supervision a good part of the year and restrict all effort to a mere fire patrol.

Under the circumstances, it appears that the best interests of the reserves, as well as the important interests of the people having dealings with these reserves, demand that the appropriation be increased at least to $500,000 for the following principal reasons:

1. The area to be cared for has been very largely increased, with the prospect of further additions.

2. The number of sales of timber have increased more than 100 per cent and require a large amount of high-grade skilled labor to properly attend to the same.

3. The free use of timber, by which the people in and near the reserves are supplied with fuel, fencing, house logs, mining timbers, etc., has increased more than 200 per cent, and also makes heavy demands upon the time and efforts of the field force, necessitating the employment of extra help capable of forest estimating, scaling, and kindred work.

4. Grazing at present is a large business, and its control occupies much time. There are over 1,500,000 sheep and over 400,000 head of cattle and horses to be accommodated on the various reserves, all of which requires much labor in field and office.

Lack of adequate funds has necessitated leaving large areas at least a part of the year without supervision and protection, and has made it impossible to provide a proper organization for some of the recently created reserves. A further continuation of this policy would not only prove disastrous to the reserves, but would be certain to shut down numerous mines, prevent many settlements from obtaining much-needed timber supplies, and would work great hardship on numerous interests, to the general detriment of the particular districts or regions involved.

I most earnestly hope that the sum of $500,000 estimated for be appropriated.

Very respectfully, W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Mr. HOAR. On page 15, lines 4 and 5, I move to strike out the word "continuation," and substitute the word "completion;" and in the next line to strike out the word "ten," and insert the word "thirty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 4, after the word "For," it is proposed to strike out "continuation," and insert "completion; and in line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten," and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

Marblehead, Mass., post-office: For completion of building under present limit, $30,000.

Mr. HOAR. I will make a brief statement in regard to that amendment, and perhaps the Senator from Iowa will assent to the amendment.

This is for the post-office building at Marblehead, Mass., which is to cost, all told, $70,000. The site has been purchased and paid for, and the remaining $30,000 can, I have no doubt, be expended more advantageously at once than by spending $10,000 in the current year. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in their omnibus bill have adopted that view. The following provision is found in that bill:

United States post-office at Marblehead, Mass., from $40,000 to $70,000.

That passed the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to increase the authorized limit of cost of the public building at Marblehead. If we enter upon that subject——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. If we enter upon that subject on this bill, it will result in making thirty or forty changes; and to avoid——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if——

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will wait one minute longer——

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. And to avoid the complications and embarrassments that would result from dealing with that question on this bill the Senator from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, has, with great care, taken up these questions and has embraced them within the bill, which is denominated for the first time the omnibus bill.

Mr. HOAR. Call it the cab bill or stagecoach bill if that would be better.

Mr. ALLISON. That bill will undoubtedly be fully considered elsewhere. So, independent of the fact that it is subject to a point of order on the ground that it is legislation, I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts not to segregate the bill in which he is interested with respect to Marblehead from the vast number of bills that have been so carefully considered by the Senator from Indiana and his committee.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Iowa is right in his facts, and that is why I wanted to interrupt him, I would desist instantly. I understand that the original estimate from some department of the Government was $70,000. That was the original scheme and plan of the building. Of it $40,000 was to be expended during the first year. This amendment does not increase the original estimate for the building. It only provides that there shall be expended in the second year what it was originally contemplated should be appropriated, as I understand. If I am wrong, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken in this respect. Last year the limit of cost was fixed at $40,000. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] will correct me if I am in error about that. I refer to the building at Marblehead.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The statement of the Senator from Iowa is quite correct.

Mr. HOAR. If I had not so understood it, I would not have made the motion on this floor. My understanding was that the bill which was passed last year for Marblehead, emanating from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, provided that the building should be erected at a cost of $70,000.

Mr. ALLISON. No.

Mr. HOAR. Seventy thousand dollars. That was last year. Then an appropriation of $40,000 was made, leaving the other $30,000, as in the case of other public works, to be appropriated from year to year. I do not understand that this is an extension of the original limit of cost of the building. It is merely appropriating in one year what was always contemplated as the appropriation.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The history of the case is this: At the last session of Congress a building was authorized at Marblehead, to be built within certain limits. An amendment was proposed to the act at the present session increasing that limit. An act was passed increasing the limit as fixed in the original act passed last year.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the Committee on Finance I desire to offer an amendment. This amendment was not considered, I understand, by the Committee on Appropriations. It was offered too late to be considered by that committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, what has become of my amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. I do withdraw it. I did not know whether the Chair so understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for action on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island, from the Committee on Finance, offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the President to cooperate, through diplomatic channels or by the appointment of a commission, or both, with the Governments of Mexico, China, Japan, and other countries for the purpose set forth in the message of the President and accompanying notes submitted to Congress January 29, 1903, and printed as Senate Document No. 119, second session Fifty-seventh Congress, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. From the same committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "applicants," in line 19, page 77, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the authority given the Secretary of the Treasury to coin subsidiary silver coins by the eighth section of an act entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes," approved March 14, 1900, may hereafter be exercised without limitation as to the amount of such subsidiary coin outstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. On page 101, line 8, I move to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred." It relates to the compensation of the chief clerk of the Geological Survey.

The proposed increase is estimated for, and I wish to state that this chief clerk acts as Director in the absence of the Director. In the General Land Office, the Pension Office, the Patent Office, and in the Indian Office corresponding duties in the absence of the several heads devolve upon assistants who receive from $3,000 to $3,500, and in the Patent Office the chief clerk, who has no duties to perform except those of chief clerk, receives $2,500. For some reason the salary of this officer has been kept below that of all other corresponding officials, and as it has been estimated for I feel sure the chairman of the committee will consent that the amendment may go on the bill. Of course it will go into conference, and the Senator from Iowa will examine the facts.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations considered this amendment and decided that it would not recommend its adoption, because the salary has existed for some time at this figure and because we found that there were a great many other persons who were entitled to the same consideration as this gentleman. Therefore, we decided not to recommend it. I suppose the amendment is in order as it is estimated. But I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that if we open the question of salaries on this bill there will be a very wide gate opened. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not press the amendment.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has the floor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland, although I myself wish to say an additional word.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from New Hampshire has offered this amendment. I have such great confidence in the Committee on Appropriations that I am surprised that for years this item has stood in this way. The incumbent of the office in an unusually capable man, of great ability and integrity. As a boy he went into the Army and came out of the civil war a colonel. He was railroad commissioner of the State of Kansas. He came here from Kansas and was made chief clerk of this office. His salary was then either $2,500 or $3,000 a year. Under Mr. Cleveland's Administration he was so expert and so necessary that his head was spared, but his salary was cut down to $2,250. He is, in the absence of the Director of the Geological Survey, the Director of the Survey. He has to do with the whole management of that big department, for it is almost a department, and although saving the Government thousands and many thousands of dollars, his salary was reduced under Mr. Secretary Hoke Smith to $2,250, and it has stood there all these years.

I have thought during my service here that, with the exception of McChesney, the disbursing officer there, there was in the case of Colonel Rizer, the chief clerk, the most persistence in doing that which was inequitable that I have noticed during twenty years' observation of these matters. I have looked at the matter of salaries on these bills for years, both here and in the House, and that other officers performing similar duties should receive three thousand or thirty-five hundred dollars and this gentleman be reduced after many years of service to $2,250 is, to my mind, an omission which is not justifiable and which can not be defended.

It is said by the chairman, who is always wise, that this increase will bring others. This is not an increase. It is simply putting this officer back where he was twenty years ago, after he has given you his service and has grown gray in modest and unusually able service. This old Union soldier would not bother you and would not lobby for an increase. He ought to get $2,500. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment and grant the amount estimated for.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know that I need to add one word to what has been said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS]. This is a discrimination which is not justified, in my opinion, by any facts that can be presented in this case. This man is receiving $250 less than the chief clerk of another bureau who has no other service to render except that of chief clerk. He is receiving a thousand and I think in one or two instances fifteen hundred dollars less than chief clerks in other bureaus who perform precisely the same service that this man does—that is, who take the place of their chief in his absence. It is a matter that has been neglected, I think.

I have never seen this gentleman. He has had no correspondence or communication with me. The matter was called to my attention by an outside party entirely. It seemed to me so fair a thing to do that I am astonished that there should be any objection whatever to granting this small increase of salary. I hope the chairman of the committee will allow the amendment to go into the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I myself presented this case to the Committee on Appropriations with that of another member of the Bureau, the disbursing officer, McChesney, who has had labor put on him within the last year or so which will require him to give an additional or increased bond, costing a hundred dollars. That will come out of his salary. I tried to get his salary raised $100 and that of the chief clerk $250. I do not want to antagonize the chief clerk, but I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that if he succeeds in getting the amendment adopted I hope he will succeed in getting the salary of the disbursing officer raised a hundred dollars, too.

Mr. GALLINGER. I propose to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, only a word. The Senate will observe that this salary is $2,250. It was made so some years ago as the result of a compromise with the House, when they made the salary two thousand and the Senate made it twenty-five hundred. The committee have had many requests for the increase of salaries of most worthy employees of the Government. The committee would be glad to recommend that this should be done. On some of the bills increases have been made by the Committee on Appropriations, notably the legislative bill, where, perhaps, half a dozen exceptional cases were provided for. On the District bill, where the salaries are exceptionally low for valuable services, in two or three or perhaps more instances the Senate proposed an ncrease.

Without saying what has been done or what can be done on this bill, I am satisfied that the increase proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will only embarrass the bill and will not be of any service.

With respect to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Maryland as to this chief clerk, I entirely agree. He is a most faithful, efficient, and accomplished officer, and I should be glad to see him paid more, if it were practicable to do so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, simply an observation. I recall the fact that when the District bill came here there were increases of salaries probably in six or eight instances. I think if we had time to recur to that bill we would find they were no more meritorious than is this.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not say that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not rise and object to those increases. I took it for granted they were right.

But now we come face to face with a proposition to make this small increase to a man who fought in the Army and who has given twenty-five years of service to the Government, who acts as Director of this Bureau in the absence of the Director, and who is being paid a salary less than that paid to any corresponding officer in the Government. It seems to me there is nothing for the committee to stand on in opposing this amendment. I want a vote on it if the chairman insists that the amendment shall not go on the bill by consent.

Mr. McCOMAS. One word more, Mr. President. In this estimate statement it appears that the chief clerk is acting Director sometimes five months in the year. The very excellent Director gets $6,000 a year, and may be absent nearly half of the year. This very efficient chief clerk may be acting Director for half the year and gets merely $2,250. It is an omission and it is an indefensible omission, and it ought to be corrected now. It is not the raising of a salary. It is putting it back where it was originally. He had $2,500, and he has lost it for some years. His good service seems to count for nothing.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not rise especially to oppose this particular amendment, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a condition of affairs that is becoming almost intolerable. We have a legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill supposed to carry all the salaries of the various department employees of the Government. It should carry them all, or at least all in the classified service. This great annual supply bill is relegated to a subcommittee of the regular standing Appropriations Committee. That subcommittee spends days and weeks—one might almost say months in some sessions of Congress—in carefully going over the bill item by item, in adjusting the salaries of Government employees. They hear from the departments—the Secretaries, the Assistant Secretaries, and others come before the subcommittee: their testimony is taken down and printed; comparisons are made and an adjustment had. But, unfortunately, we have in several other appropriation bills another lot of employees whose salaries are not thus compared and adjusted, as, for instance, the Indian appropriation bill provides for a hundred or more clerks; on the Army appropriation bill 300 clerks, perhaps, and, I presume, from what the Senator from New Hampshire has just said, that there may be some in the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. There are a large number.

Mr. WARREN. And there are still more in the sundry civil bill. I submit that the subcommittee which has to stand against the annual onslaught for raises of salaries that are sought ought to have better protection. They are compelled, in completing their labors of adjustment, to sometimes object to raises which they, perhaps, in their own private business, would be willing to concede to employees. After all this the question of raise of salaries should not be brought in here upon other bills and a different standard applied. All this ought to be fought out, or thrashed out, during the consideration of a regular salary bill. It is extremely unpleasant for the committee, and I believe it is distracting and disorganizing in its effects upon the affairs of Government. It seems to me the employees in the classified service ought all to be as nearly on a par and grade as can be in the different departments, and I want to suggest to the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that he take up in the next Congress the whole subject with the committee of the House. There seems to me to be no reason why a change can not be made so that next session we can have the regular department salaries all in one bill. Then I think we can treat the subject more fairly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not hear the Senator from Wyoming say anything about the Agricultural appropriation bill, which I think carries as many salaries and makes as many increases as any other bill.

Mr. WARREN. I thank the Senator for reminding me of that. The Agricultural bill should be considered in the same way. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. Does the Senator from Wyoming know that we are not talking about an increase? The question is whether you will give to this faithful servant, who for years got $2,500 and for eight years has been getting $2,250, what he had theretofore? We ask no increase. We ask merely to give him his own.

Mr. WARREN. For years I served as governor of a Territory, receiving $2,600 a year by your annual appropriation act, when the salary by law was three thousand or thirty-five hundred dollars. We have scores of men who are receiving to-day less than they were when appointed, or less than they received at some previous time.

Mr. McCOMAS. My point is that the man's salary has been decreased $250. Will you refuse to give him that which will put him back where he was before and will not increase his salary?

Mr. WARREN. It matters not whether it is a reduction or an increase. The principle is all the same. I said in the beginning of my remarks that I did not care to take up this amendment particularly, nor to inveigh against this particular man, but that the whole matter of distributing the employees of the Government through various bills and still have one regular salary bill, supposed to carry them all, is all wrong.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduced an amendment to give to the stenographer to the Fish Commissioner $1,800 instead of $1,600. The officer in question has been there over twenty years. He entered the service at $1,800. By the Dockery Commission his salary was reduced to $1,600. He has been an extremely faithful and valuable officer and is much trusted by the Commissioner. It seems to me an exactly parallel case with the one stated by the Senator from Maryland.

I think it is very hard that a man who entered at $1,800 should through no fault be reduced to $1,600. I presented the case to the committee and they decided, no doubt for good and sufficient reasons, that they would not make the increase at this time.

But, Mr. President, as this has been brought up here, I think, in justice, I must bring this case up, too. If we are going to make these restorations in one case there is no reason why they should not be made in all cases. I think the true way to get at it is that suggested by the Senator from Wyoming. It seems to me this whole system of salaries ought so far as possible to be handled under one bill by one subcommittee. But in any event, Mr. President, if we are to enter on the restoration of salaries I shall want to ask for this one, which stands on the same ground as the other.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that that suggestion will not mislead any Senator in voting on the proposition I have offered. This is a fair and just proposition, and I have no doubt that the Senate will treat it as a simple proposition, and then the Senator from Massachusetts can, of course, move his amendment if he chooses to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; mine stands on exactly the same ground. It is not an increase; it is a restoration.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I should like to say one word, by permission of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. I appreciate the merits of this case fully. I have no doubt that this gentleman ought to have more salary. Probably if he was out of the Government service he would get it. But my experience recently tells me that if we should increase this salary now it is doubtful whether it would be in the bill after it got through the two Houses.

It has been my observation and experience recently that in nearly every instance where salaries were increased in connection with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill we were finally almost driven to the necessity of giving up the increase of salaries in dealing with the conferees on the part of the other House. If I may be allowed to refer to it, the other House seem disposed to increase the force that is needed in the departments to do the work, but they are stubbornly opposed to an increase of salaries.

While I do not intend to express an opinion on this subject, I think, as a matter of fact, we had better keep the salaries down, so that the bill can be readily disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I will venture the further suggestion that there is no force or potency or reason in the observation made by the Senator from Illinois. If that were so we would refuse to increase salaries in all appropriation bills. The Senator did not raise that objection when we increased almost a score of salaries in the District of Columbia appropriation bill; and I venture to say that the other House, if I may be permitted to allude to it in this connection, will not insist upon every one of those amendments going out of the bill.

I think, Mr. President, the Senator ought not to give away the case as he has done. If the Senate in its wisdom puts this in the bill, and the Senator is on the conference committee, he ought to stand by the Senate, and he ought not in advance to advertise that the Senate conferees will not do their duty.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to correct him, I do not think I need the lecture that he is disposed to give me. In the first place, I was not upon the conference on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and I do not expect to be on the conference committee in connection with this bill, but I am speaking of another bill in which I advocated the increase of salaries in many instances and carried them through the Senate, and I am stating the naked fact that in order to get the bill passed we had to give away most of the increases of salary which the Senate made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had no intention of lecturing my amiable friend beside whom I have had the honor of sitting for several years. But I will repeat that I do not think we ought to have a bugbear thrust in our faces in regard to this little appropriation of $250. If it goes in the bill, it will go into conference. If it goes out in conference, I can not help it. I should hope that it will not go out; but we will take our chances on that point. All I ask is that it shall go as an act of simple justice into the bill and then have it submitted to the judgment of the conferees of the two Houses; and if it is lost in conference, as possibly it may be, there will be no occasion on my part to find fault. But I do not want the matter prejudged or the statement made that it will go out in conference when it may not go out in conference. That is the only point I intended to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 5 o'clock has arrived. By unanimous consent, at 5 o'clock pension bills were to be considered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has stated the agreement as it is entered on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I have just learned that the order respecting the pension matters at 5 o'clock was made subject to appropriation bills. I would have been glad to have proceeded for half an hour longer with the sundry civil bill, but I will not insist upon it now, as the Senator from New Hampshire has probably a number of bills which he wishes to have disposed of.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the chairman of the committee if he will not allow the amendment I have offered in favor of increasing McChesney's salary $100 to go with the others. If not, I will have to discuss it.

Mr. ALLISON. Now?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Will not the Senator allow it to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. TELLER. No; I want to have the amendment made to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. One hundred dollars is less than $250, and I have no doubt that one is as meritorious as the other. I shall not resist the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. LODGE. I shall make the same motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the items for United States Geological Survey, line 9, page 101, strike out "four" and insert "five" before "hundred;" so as to read:

Chief disbursing clerk, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document the decision of Judge Grosscup in the case of The United States of America v. Swift & Co., circuit court, northern district of Illinois.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that there may be printed in the RECORD and also as a Senate document a paper which the Chair did not understand.

Mr. CARMACK. The opinion of Judge Grosscup in the case of The United States v. Swift & Co.

Mr. SPOONER. Printed in the RECORD or as a document?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Printed in the RECORD and as a document.

Mr. MCCOMAS. It is a very important decision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The opinion is as follows:

In the circuit court of the United States, northern district of Illinois, northern division. The United States of America v. Swift & Co. et al.

The defendants are 7 corporations, 1 copartnership, and 23 other persons, and the petition is fairly summarized as follows:

"First. That at the time of its filing they had been and then were engaged in the business of buying live stock at divers points throughout the United States where stock yards existed, and slaughtering the same at such places in different States, and converting the same into fresh meats for human consumption.

"Second. That they had been and then were engaged in the business of selling such fresh meats at the places where prepared to dealers and consumers in divers other States and Territories of the United States and in foreign countries, and shipping the same when so sold, from said places of preparation to such dealers and consumers, pursuant to such sales, and were thus engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and with foreign nations.

"Third. That they had been and then were engaged in the business of shipping such fresh meats from said points where so prepared, by common carriers to the respective agents of the defendants located at and near the principal markets of such meats in other States and Territories and in foreign countries for sale by those agents in those markets to dealers and consumers, which they there sold through their agents and were thus engaged in trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and with foreign nations.

"Fourth. That of the total volume of trade and commerce among the said States and Territories in fresh meats the said defendants together controlled about 60 per cent.

"Fifth. That as to such trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and foreign nations in fresh meats the said defendants should, and but for the acts hereinafter complained of would, be and remain in competition with each other.

"Sixth. That said defendants, in violation of the act of Congress of July 2, 1890, and in order to restrain competition among themselves as to the purchase of live stock necessary to the production of the meats produced by them, have engaged in and intend to continue an unlawful combination and conspiracy between themselves for directing and requiring their respective purchasing agents at the said several stock yards and markets where they customarily purchase such live stock, which live stock is produced and owned principally in other States and Territories of the United States and shipped by the owners thereof to such stock yards for competitive sale, to refrain from bidding against each other when making purchases of such live stock, and by these means inducing and compelling the owners of such live stock to sell the same at less prices than they would receive if such bidding were competitive; which combination and conspiracy is in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States, etc.

"Seventh. That said defendants, in further violation of said act, and in order to further restrain competition among themselves, which would otherwise exist, as to the purchase of live stock necessary to the production of the meats produced by them, have engaged in and intend to continue an unlawful combination and conspiracy among themselves for bidding up, through their agents, the prices of live stock for a few days at said stock yards, thereby inducing shippers from other States and Territories to make large shipments of such live stock to such stock yards, and then refrain from bidding up such live stock, and thereby obtaining such live stock at prices much less than it would bring in the regular way of trade.

"Eighth. That said defendants, in further violation of said act, and in order to restrain and destroy competition among themselves as to such trade and commerce and to monopolize the same, have engaged in and intend to continue an unlawful combination and conspiracy to arbitrarily from time to time lower and fix prices and maintain uniform prices at which they will sell, directly or through their respective agents, such fresh meats to dealers and consumers throughout said States and Territories and foreign countries. That the arbitrary raising, lowering, fixing, and maintaining of said prices is effected through the action of divers of their agents in secretly holding periodical meetings and there agreeing upon the prices to be adopted by said defendants, respectively, in such trade and commerce, which said prices are notified by letters and telegrams and are adhered to in their sales, which are made directly and among other ways, and by collusively restricting and curtailing the quantities of such meats shipped by them in pursuance of such combination, and imposing against each other divers penalties for any deviations from such prices, and establishing a uniform rule for the giving of credit to dealers throughout the said States and Territories and foreign countries, and for the conduct of the business of such dealers, with penalties for violations thereof, by notifying each other of the delinquencies of said dealers, and keeping what is commonly known as a 'black list' of such delinquents and refusing to sell meats to any of such delinquent dealers.

"Ninth. And the said defendants, in violation of the provisions of the said act, have engaged in and intend to continue an unlawful combination and conspiracy, to direct and require their respective agents at and near many of the markets for such fresh meats throughout the United States and Territories to arbitrarily make and impose uniform charges for cartage for delivery upon making such sales to dealers and consumers in those markets of the meats shipped to them through said agents by the said defendants, respectively, from their several points of preparation, thereby increasing the charges for such meats to said dealers and consumers.

"Tenth. That notwithstanding the common carriers by railroad subject to the provisions of the laws of the United States for the regulation of commerce have established and published their schedule of rates, fares, and charges for the transportation of live stock and for the transportation of meats, which are the only lawful rates for such transportation, the said defendants, intending thereby to monopolize the commerce aforesaid and prevent competition therein, have made and are making agreements and arrangements with divers officers and agents of such common carriers whereby the said defendants were to receive, and will continue to receive, by means of rebates and other devices, unlawful rates for such transportation, less than the lawful rates, which rebates they divide among themselves, and will continue to do so unless restrained by the injunction of this court, which is a scheme to monopolize, and also a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States and Territories and with foreign nations.

"Eleventh. That the said defendants now are, and for years past have been, in combination and conspiracy with each other and with the railroad companies and others to complainant unknown to obtain a monopoly of the supply and distribution of fresh meats throughout the United States and its Territories and foreign countries; to that end the defendants do and will artificially restrain such commerce and put in force abnormal, unreasonable, and arbitrary regulations for the conduct of their own and each other's business, effecting the same from the shipment of the live stock from the plains to the final distribution of the meats to the consumer. All to the injury of the people and in defiance of law."

To this petition five of the defendant corporations have filed joint and several demurrers, the grounds of which are as follows:

"The bill of complaint does not allege any contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce within the meaning of said act of Congress of July 2, 1890.

"The bill of complaint does not allege any acts of defendants monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining or conspiring to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce within the meaning of said act.

"If the act of Congress in question should be given a construction which would sustain this bill of complaint, such act would violate the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

"Said bill is multifarious.

"There is a misjoinder of causes of action and of persons in said bill, as alleged in said demurrers.

"The said bill of complaint and the allegations and charges therein are not sufficiently definite or specific, but are too general and indefinite."

The hearing is on these demurrers.

After the foregoing statement of facts, Grosscup, circuit judge, delivered the opinion.

Commerce, briefly stated, is the sale or exchange of commodities. But that which the law looks upon as the body of commerce is not restricted to specific acts of sale or exchange. It includes the intercourse—all the initiatory and intervening acts, instrumentalities, and dealings—that directly bring about the sale or exchange. Thus, though sale or exchange is a commercial act, so also is the solicitation of the drummer, whose occupation it is to bring about the sale or exchange. (Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S., 289.) The whole transaction from initiation to culmination is commerce.

When commerce, thus broadly defined, is between parties dealing from different States—to be effected so far as the immediate act of exchange goes by transportation from State to State—it is "commerce between the States," within the meaning of the Constitution and the statute known as the Sherman Act; but it is not the transportation that makes the transaction interstate commerce. That is an adjunct only, essential to commerce, but not the test. The underlying test is that the transaction, as an entirety, including each part calculated to bring about the result, reaches into two or more States, and that the parties dealing with reference thereto deal from different States. An interstate commercial transaction is, in this sense, an affair rising from different States and centering in the act of exchange, each essential part of the affair being as much commerce as is the center. With this definition in mind, let us see what the transaction made out in the petition is.

For the purpose of clear exposition, the facts set forth in the petition should be separated into two groups: Those that are intended to bring the transaction within the body of interstate commerce, and those that are intended to fix upon such transaction the character of unlawful combination and conspiracy. Shorn of verbiage and of immaterial accessories the first group may be stated as follows: The defendants, controlling 60 per cent of the trade and commerce in fresh meats in the United States, buy, in the course of their business, live stock shipped from points throughout the United States, which, having been converted into fresh meats, is sold again by them at the places where prepared to dealers and consumers in other States, or is sold through their agents, located in other States, to dealers and consumers in the States where the agents are located. The shipments in the first class of sales are made directly from the places where the meat is prepared to the dealers and consumers in other States, and in the latter class to the agents in the other States, who, upon sale, deliver directly to the dealer and consumer.

What may be called the body of these transactions is twofold. It reaches backward to the purchase of cattle that come to defendants from States other than those in which defendants manufacture; and it reaches forward to the sale of the meats, after conversion, to parties dealing with respect thereto from other States, followed by shipments into the other States. Each of these transactions constitute, in my judgment, interstate commerce. The purchase of cattle shipped habitually from other States to the markets where defendants' purchase, in the expectation that the purchase will be made by the slaughter companies, is an act of interstate commerce. (Hopkins case, 171 United States, 590.)

It is none the less so merely because the local incidents or facilities for such purchase are to be regarded as outside the interstate character of the transaction. Thus the local commission broker, or the men who drive the cattle from the pens to the slaughterhouse, need not in any survey of the transaction be held to be within the interstate status of the transaction. With them it is essentially the same whether the cattle come from the State in which the purchase is made or from other States. They are aids or facilities only, and as such are merely local incidents. But the purchase of live stock thus brought habitually from other States relates in its larger bearings to a transaction that had its beginning in other States. The original shipments are influenced and to a large extent brought about by the character of the purchase.

The purchase, the shipments, and the transportation are commercially interdependent; and in any survey of the transaction as an entirety none could be omitted. They each go to make the transaction, and covering different States, they stamp the transaction—not all its incidents, but its essential body—as a transaction in interstate commerce.

Coming to the other branch of the transaction—the sales by defendants—a like result follows. Unquestionably it is interstate commerce when purchasers from other States buy directly from the defendants and have the meats shipped to them by the vendors. The situs of such a transaction, both as to initiatory intercourse and to transportation in futherance of the exchange, includes a State other than the one from which defendants deal.

I think the same is true of meat sent to agents and sold from their stores. The transaction in such case in reality is between the purchaser and the agents' principal. The agents represent the principal at the place where the exchange takes place, but the transaction, as a commercial entity, includes the principal, and includes him as dealing from his place of business. Indeed, such privity exists between the principal and the transaction that he could, at the instant, as a citizen of another State, sue upon the transaction in the Federal courts; nor have I any question that if the conditions of this case were reversed, so that defendants were invoking the shelter instead of seeking to escape the obligations of the commerce clause, Federal law would be found equal to the protection asked.

I need not dwell on the contention of defendants that the fresh meats in the hands of the agents are subject to ordinary State taxation, or upon the cases cited in this connection. It is enough to say that because a thing can be taxed by the State it does not follow that it lies outside the body of interstate commerce; for commerce, interstate as well as domestic, is subject to the police and taxing power of the State so long as the exercise of such power does not interfere with the National Government's exclusive right of regulation. (Addyston Pipe and Steel Company v. United States, 175 U. S., 25; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S., 349; Prentice and Eagan on the Commerce Clause of the Constitution, p. 27.) Nor shall I differentiate the Knight case, the Hopkins case, and other cases urged upon me as applicable to the case under consideration. A study of these cases will show that they are not in conflict with the views already expressed.

The next inquiry is this: Do the facts set forth in the second grouping fix upon the transaction, even though the transactions be within the body of interstate commerce, the character of unlawful combination? The averments of the petition in this respect may be summarized as follows: That the defendants are engaged in an unlawful combination and conspiracy under the Sherman Act, in (a) directing and requiring their purchasing agents at the markets where the live stock was customarily purchased to refrain from bidding against each other when making such purchases; (b) in bidding up, through their agents, the prices of live stock for a few days at a time, to induce large shipments, and then ceasing from bids, to obtain the live stock thus shipped at prices much less than it would bring in the regular way; (c) in agreeing, at meetings between them, upon prices to be adopted by all, and restriction upon the quantities of meat shipped; (d) in directing and requiring their agents throughout the United States to impose uniform charges for cartage for delivery, thereby increasing to dealers and consumers the charges for such meats; and (e) in making agreements with the transportation companies for rebates and other discriminative rates.

No one can doubt that these averments state a case of combination. Whether the combination be unlawful or not depends on whether it is in restraint of trade. The general meaning of that term is no longer open to inquiry. It has been passed upon carefully by the Supreme Court in the Freight Association case (166 U. S., 290), and in the Traffic case (171 U. S., 558), where the whole subject was a year later elaborately reargued. I will not extend into this opinion even a summary of these cases. It is clear from them that restraint of trade is not dependent upon any consideration of reasonableness or unreasonableness in the combination averred; nor is it to be tested by the prices that result from the combination. Indeed, combination that leads directly to lower prices to the consumer may, within the doctrine of these cases, even as against the consumer, be restraint of trade; and combination that leads directly to higher prices may, as against the producer, be restraint of trade.

The statute, thus interpreted, has no concern with prices, but looks solely to competition, and to the giving of competition full play, by making illegal any effort at restriction upon competition. Whatever combination has the direct and necessary effect of restricting competition is, within the meaning of the Sherman Act as now interpreted, restraint of trade.

Thus defined, there can be no doubt that the agreement of the defendants to refrain from bidding against each other in the purchase of cattle is combination in restraint of trade; so also their agreement to bid up prices to stimulate shipments, intending to cease from bidding when the shipments have arrived. The same result follows when we turn to the combination of defendants to fix prices upon, and restrict the quantities of, meat shipped to their agents or their customers. Such agreements can be nothing less than restriction upon competition, and therefore a combination in restraint of trade; and thus viewed, the petition, as an entirety, makes out a case under the Sherman Act.

The demurrer challenges the petition for multifariousness and misjoinder of parties; and challenges each paragraph of the petition, standing separately, as insufficient to constitute a case under the Sherman Act. But the paragraphs can not properly be looked upon as separate causes of action. They relate clearly to each other, thus constituting a whole that is the sum of the parts; and thus regarded, are free from the objections indicated.

It may be true that the way of enforcing any decree under this petition is beset with difficulties, and that a literal enforcement may result in vexatious interference with defendant's affairs. But in the inquiry before me I am not at liberty to stop before such considerations. The Sherman Act, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, is the law of the land, and to the law as it stands both court and people must yield obedience.

The demurrer is overruled, and the motion for preliminary injunction granted.

(Indorsed.) Filed February 18, 1903. Marshall E. Sampsell.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 8, 10, 25, 31, 40, 45, 56, 57, 58, 60, 63, 72, 73, 74, 76, 84, 85, 93, and 95.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 29, 34, 35, 37, 38, 41, 42, 46, 48, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 75, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 86, 87, 91, and 94, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "thirty-three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "fifty-four thousand one hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 7 of said amendment strike out "one million two hundred thousand" and insert "six hundred thousand;" in line 22 of said amendment, after the word "list," strike out all down to and including the word "four," in line 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following: ": Provided, That said sum shall be accepted by said Indians in full payment and satisfaction of all claim and demand growing out of said loyal Creek claims, and the payment thereof shall be a full release of the Government from any such claim or claims;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 4 of said amendment, after the word "one," strike out "clerk" and insert "stenographer;" in line 6 of said amendment, after the word "expenses," insert "and subsistence;" in line 7 of said amendment, strike out "clerks" and insert "stenographers;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 10 of said amendment, after the word "Provided," strike out down to and including the word "Interior," in line 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That upon the final determination of cases within the jurisdiction of said citizenship court, said court may fix reasonable compensation to the attorneys employed by contract dated January 17, 1901, with the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, and such determination shall be made irrespective of the rate fixed in said contract between said attorneys and said nations, or either of them, unless the same shall have received the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. And upon the final determination of said cases by said citizenship court, the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to pay to said attorneys, on the warrant or warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of such compensation out of any funds in the Treasury belonging to said nations;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following: ": Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be applied only to the expenses incident to the survey, platting, and appraisement of town sites heretofore set aside and reserved from allotment: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the survey and platting, at their own expense, of town sites by private parties where stations are located along the lines of railroads, nor the unrestricted alienation of lands for such purposes, when recommended by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and approved by the Secretary of the Interior;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 27 of said amendment, after the word "rendered," strike out "in equity" and insert "equitably;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following: "That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purpose of aiding indigent and identified full-blood Mississippi Choctaws to remove to the Indian Territory, to be expended at the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following: ": Provided, That the money hereinbefore appropriated for education, per third article of the Quapaw treaty of May 13, 1833, and the unexpended balance of the same heretofore appropriated, not to exceed $2,000, shall be paid to the treasurer of the Quapaw tribe or nation, and expended by him, under the direction of the Quapaw council, for educational purposes only;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following: "That in the lands within the former Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing gilsonite, asphaltum, elaterite, or other like substances, which were reserved from location and entry by provision in the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes,' approved June 7, 1897, all discoveries and locations of any such mineral lands by qualified persons prior to January 1, 1891, not previously discovered and located, who recorded notices of such discoveries and locations prior to January 1, 1891, either in the State of Colorado or in the office of the county recorder of Uintah County, Utah, shall have all the force and effect accorded by law to locations of mining claims upon the public domain. All such locations may hereafter be perfected, and patents shall be issued therefor upon compliance with the requirements of the mineral-land laws, provided that the owners of such locations shall relocate their respective claims and record the same in the office of the county recorder of Uintah County, Utah, within ninety days after the passage of this act. All locations of any such mineral lands made and recorded on or subsequent to January 1, 1891, are hereby declared to be null and void; and the remainder of the lands heretofore reserved as aforesaid because of the mineral substances contained in them, in so far as the same may be within even numbered sections, shall be sold and disposed of in tracts not exceeding 40 acres or a quarter of a quarter of a section in such manner and upon such terms and with such restrictions as may be prescribed in a proclamation of the President of the United States issued for that purpose not less than one hundred and twenty days after the passage of this act, and not less than ninety days before the time of sale or disposal, and the balance of said lands and also all the mineral therein are hereby specifically reserved for future action of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of said amendment, after the word "therein," strike out all down to and including the word "negotiation," in line 11; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 2 of said amendment strike out "two hundred" and insert "three hundred and fifty:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 4 of said amendment, after the word "dollars," insert ":" in line 5 of said amendment, after the word "which," insert "said;" in line 5 of said amendment, after the word "sum," insert "so much as may be necessary;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following: "And any private lands occupied by actual settlers over which an Indian reservation has been or may be extended by Executive order may be exchanged, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and at the expense of the owner thereof, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for vacant, nonmineral, nontimbered, surveyed public lands of like area and value, and situated in the same State or Territory;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following: ": Provided, That said sum shall only be paid upon the presentation of a general release executed by said Ernest A. Lee, or his legal representative;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment, after the word "permitted," insert: ", upon such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Restore the matter proposed to be stricken out; on page 46, line 7 of said bill, strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" on page 46, lines 12 and 13 of said bill, strike out "thirty-one thousand nine" and insert "thirty-two thousand one;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of said amendment add the following: ": Provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may, in his discretion, pay any field matron on account of meritorious services an addition of $10 per month to the $50 as provided for in this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

CLAIMS BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under the order will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to make an inquiry. Does the order under which we are proceeding include all House bills; and if not, what House bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It applies to pension bills and bills correcting the military and naval records of soldiers.

Mr. WARREN. I understood the Senator would ask to include House bills; but if the order is only for pension and record bills, I wish to give notice that in the morning I shall ask leave to call up about half a dozen House claims bills—small bills for small amounts—which, unless passed right away, will not be in time for the Executive to submit them to the Department in the usual way and get answers.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION AND MILITARY RECORD BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement which will occupy only a moment. I notice that the agreement as printed in the Calendar reads that one hour shall be given to the consideration of these bills. The RECORD will disclose the fact that I asked the Senate to agree to proceed to their consideration at 5 o'clock to-day without a limitation to one hour. If they are not completed in an hour it may be that I would like a little further time, that is all.

Jubb, late of Company A, Third Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARY R. BAYLY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10175) granting a pension to Mary R. Bayly, formerly Mary S. Redick, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary R. Bayly, formerly Mary S. Redick, late nurse, Medical Department, United States Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BYRON C. KNAPP.

Mr. CARMACK. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7433) granting an increase of pension to Byron C. Knapp, to report it without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Byron C. Knapp, late of Company B, Second Battalion, Sixteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. LAWSON.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider a case on the Calendar which has been passed over. The Post-Office Department and the committee are interested in it. It is a little matter of a mail carrier. It is the bill (H. R. 7864) to pay John F. Lawson $237.96, balance due him for services as United States mail carrier. It has passed the House, it is recommended by the committee, and I ask permission to have it disposed of at this time.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was rather understood that no general business would be done this afternoon, but I will not object to this bill.

Mr. BATE. I watched, sir, and that was not understood. I should not have presented the request if it had been, although I am obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Several Senators consulted me about it.

Mr. KEAN. No one objects to this bill.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to object to this bill, but I will object to any business unless——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Is there objection to the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Tennessee?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREST LIEU SELECTIONS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15985) to confirm certain forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897, to report it without amendment. In view of the fact that both the House and the Senate have passed similar bills, and that there is a typographical error in the Senate bill, I ask that this bill may now be considered. It is a short bill. The word "lien" should be changed to the word "lieu." It refers to "lieu" land and not "lien" land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill as now printed is as it is desired to be.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The House bill is the correct one.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask that the House be requested to return to the Senate its bill on this subject, with a view to its indefinite postponement when received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, if no objection is made. The Chair hears none.

PURE-FOOD LEGISLATION.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I wish at this time to ask unanimous consent that immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow the pending business be laid aside and the Senate proceed during the morning hour to the consideration of the bill (S. 3109) for preventing the adulteration, misbranding, and imitation of foods, beverages, candies, drugs, and condiments in the District of Columbia and the Territories, and for regulating interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there are so few Senators present that I think unanimous consent ought not to be given to the request of the Senator; and I must object.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. MCCUMBER). Give notice that you will ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to call the Senator's attention to one fact. Then I will give notice. This bill was put on the Calendar on the 2d day of April, 1902, and because of one objection after another it has been impossible to bring it up and have it heard at any time. I can now see no possible way to get consideration for it, and yet I do not believe there is any bill in which the public is more interested than this particular bill. I refer to the public in general, wholesalers and retailers, and the business men of the country.

It seems to me we ought to have, in the course of two years, one hour or two hours in which to consider a bill that has been the first one on the Calendar during all the length of time I have stated, and it seems to me there ought not to be specious objection.

All I desire is to have an honest hearing for the bill. If the Senate does not want to pass the bill, all it has to do is to vote against it. But it does seem to me that the time has come when I have a right to insist as a matter of courtesy and as a matter of justice to the bill that it have the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the Senator from North Dakota will not insist on his motion. There are a large number of post-office nominations which ought to be referred, and it is late in the session.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. MCCUMBER). Make your request in the morning hour when there is a full attendance.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I will meet with the same objection in the morning hour as at any other time. I should like to get the bill to a vote at some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota insist upon his motion that the Senate adjourn?

Mr. MCCUMBER. I insist upon the motion. If the Senators want to vote it down they can do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 26, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House House concurrent resolution No. 92, in relation to the invitation extended to Congress by the National Commission of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition and by the Louisiana Exposition Purchase Company, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to call up a privileged bill.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present for the purpose of printing in the RECORD two conference reports and statements.

The SPEAKER. They will be printed in the RECORD, under the rule.

FRANCIS A. TRADEWELL.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 16161, "An act granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Tradewell," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate insert "sixteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. MCCUMBER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

This bill originally passed the House at $12 per month, but was amended in the Senate to $20 per month. The result of the conference is that the Senate recedes from its amendment at $20 per month and the conferees have agreed to a rating of $16 per month, and your conferees recommend that the bill pass at $16 per month, in accordance with said agreement.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER.
WILLIAM RICHARDSON.

JOEL C. SHEPHERD.

The report of the committee of conference is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5835) "An act granting an increase of pension to Joel C. Shepherd," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
E. W. CARMACK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

This bill originally passed the Senate at $20 per month, but was amended in the House to $16 per month. The result of the conference is that the Senate agrees to the House amendment, and your conferees recommend that the bill pass at $16 per month, as it originally passed the House.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER.
WILLIAM RICHARDSON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16567. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904; and

H. R. 16161. An act granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Tradewell.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17088. An act to create a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Texarkana, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 159. Joint resolution granting to the New York and Jersey Railroad Company the right to construct and operate an underground railway under land owned by the United States in the city of New York.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following order of the Senate:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives the enrolled bill (S. 5718) providing for the sale of sites for manufacturing or individual plants in the Indian Territory, with the request that the House of Representatives vacate the action of the Speaker in signing the said enrolled bill, and return the same, and the message of the Senate agreeing to the amendment of the House to said bill, to the Senate.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Speaker be, and he hereby is, empowered and directed to strike his signature from the said enrolled bill (S. 5718), and that the message of the Senate on said bill to the House be returned to the Senate, in accordance with the request of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation as to why this action is to be taken. It reverses the order of the House; is a new way, it seems to me, of reconsidering a proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. I can only say to the gentleman that it has heretofore been customary to comply with requests of the Senate of a character such as this.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the parliamentary situation? We have passed a Senate bill, have we not, and the Speaker of the House approved of it, and now this action reverses it here.

Mr. DALZELL. This action puts it in the situation it was in before the Speaker signed it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does it not do more than that?

Mr. LACEY. Just a word in explanation, which I think will satisfy the gentleman. We have passed another bill in relation to the recording of instruments in the Indian Territory with which a portion of this bill, which has not become law, would conflict.

It is too late to reconsider it, but by unanimous consent that portion of the bill which conflicts with the other bill that passed both Houses could be eliminated and thus prevent sending two bills to the President in direct conflict. It is a conflict of that kind that can only be avoided by making this arrangement with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RESIGNATION OF MR. KLEBERG AS A CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Speaker, House of Representatives:

SIR: I hereby resign my position as conferee on conference committee on H. R. 12098, an act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska."

RUDOLPH KLEBERG.

The SPEAKER appointed as a conferee in place of Mr. KLEBERG Mr. GRIFFITH.

UNION STATION BILL.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up conference report on the bill S. 4825, to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the following conference report and statement:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, and after full and free conference have been unable to reach an agreement.

J. W. BABCOCK,
SYDNEY E. MUDD,
A. C. LATIMER,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. GALLINGER,
W. P. DILLINGHAM,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The only amendments to the bill not disposed of are amendments numbered 39 and 41, decreasing the amount to be paid to the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad from $1,500,000, as proposed by the Senate, to $1,000,000, as proposed by the House, and also so much of amendment numbered 57 as relates to decreasing the amount to be paid to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from $1,500,000, as proposed in the legislation of February 12, 1901, to $1,000,000, as proposed by the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate bill. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those that possibly do not fully understand the situation, that the conference committees of the two Houses have been unable to agree. I will say that under the present law for the elevation of the tracks and the elimination of grade crossings, each road was to receive $1,500,000. This amount was supposed to be one-half of the cost of the elevation of the tracks, and not any part of the cost of construction of the depots, freight yards, coach yards, or other necessary matters for railroad facilities. The House committee was opposed to the location at Massachusetts avenue. They did not believe it was for the interest of the public, or for the interest of the District, that the station should be located at Massachusetts avenue. They favored the C street site. The Massachusetts avenue site cost the General Government and the District $1,600,000 more than the C street site.

A proposition was made in the committee that this amount of $1,600,000 be divided; that is, the District and the Government should bear $600,000, and each railroad company bear $500,000; or, in other words, cut down the appropriation to the railroad $1,000,000. The railroad companies insisted on the Massachusetts avenue site, and stated, after submitting the plans for the C street site, that they would not construct a depot at C street unless they were obliged to do so by law.

There are several reasons why the Massachusetts avenue site is desirable from a railroad standpoint. In the first place, it cuts the elevation down one-half. The elevation under the present law and under the proposed C street site is the same. The Massachusetts avenue site is some 10 feet lower, and instead of an elevation that permits the streets to pass under the railroad track, the streets will have to be depressed from 8 to 15 feet to pass under the elevations as proposed by the Massachusetts avenue site.

By the selection of the Massachusetts avenue site one-half of the elevation was saved. It moved back the depot two blocks and saved not only the cost of that construction, but also the use of the two blocks of very valuable land, worth six or seven hundred thousand dollars. So, from a financial standpoint, the Massachusetts avenue site was a desirable site for the railroad company.

But, Mr. Speaker, that site cost the District $1,600,000 more than the other site, as it requires a great fill of 34 feet and 5 inches where the depot is located. Now, your committee believe that their action was just, and it was the unanimous report of the committee, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it should be entirely satisfactory to all concerned; and when you vote on this proposition, remember that you are voting to put this additional burden of $1,600,000 upon the District and the General Government; and therefore I ask and move that the House insist upon its disagreement. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time. The Chair should first state, however, the motion that the gentleman has made, and his motion is to insist on the amendments of the House.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from the amendments numbered 39 and 41, and so much of amendment 57 as has not been agreed upon in conference. Now, Mr. Speaker, we went very thoroughly into the argument why this should be done the last time this bill was before the House. In the course of his remarks the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] wound up with the dramatic exhortation, "Choose ye, then, this day whom ye will serve," and my motion was voted down.

That may have been, Mr. Speaker, for two reasons. It may have been because some members of the House imagined that I had suddenly sprung into being as a candidate for the Speakership, and that having already pledged themselves to the gentleman from Illinois, they did not, under the circumstances, feel that they could do otherwise than support his motion. [Laughter.] I appreciate the honor so gracefully thrust upon me by the gentleman from Illinois, but beg to assure the members of the House that I have no such aspirations. [Laughter.]

I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that if the gentleman from Illinois would consider this matter for a moment with the same calm, judicial spirit which we are all of us so confident he will maintain when he occupies the chair of the Speaker; if he would consider it in the same manly, generous manner that he does his private relations, he would not advocate having once made a bargain with a friend, and then having requested that friend to spend more money and give him something better than the original bargain called for, turn around and want to take away a part of what he agreed originally to give him for what was being given in return.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may have been for another reason that the motion I made was defeated. It may have been owing to certain inferences that could have been drawn from the remarks made by two of the conferees. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked this question:

Mr. CANNON. I ask my friend's judgment. If the House stands firm, if this legislation is enacted with the House amendment on it, will it become a law and will it not be accepted gladly by the railroads? I want the gentleman's judgment on it.

The chairman of the conferees on the part of the House answered:

There is no question about that proposition.

One other of the conferees made this statement:

I undertake to say that in twenty minutes, yes, in five minutes, after this message goes back to conference, if it shall go, we can get an agreement, if the House conferees shall be willing to do so, by which at least $500,000 would be saved, as against the proposition now made by a member of the District Committee, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

Further on he says:

I think I may say I know that we can get an agreement forthwith on a million and a quarter to each railroad. I say further that I think it is quite likely that we can secure the adoption of the House proposition.

That statement may have misled some members of the House, and certainly placed me in an awkward position. The distinguished chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate made this statement the following day on the floor of the Senate:

Mr. President, I want to make a single observation. The conferees on this bill have agreed as to all matters in dispute, except the one item of a proposed reduction on the part of the other House of the amount of money to be contributed by the Government and the District of Columbia to these two railroads. That matter is still in dispute.

I have supposed, Mr. President, that it was not the proper thing, in presenting a conference report, to state the action of the conferees when they were considering a matter of this kind, but inasmuch as certain statements were made on yesterday in another place, to the effect that if this matter went back to conference again there would be no difficulty in securing a recession by the conferees on the part of the Senate, I desire to put myself on record as saying that the conferees on the part of the Senate have never said anything or suggested anything which would warrant that statement. The matter goes back to conference with that point of disagreement absolutely open for further consideration.

Mr. Speaker, a statement was also made by a distinguished menber of the District of Columbia Committee in regard to the railroads being willing to accept the million dollars. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] in the course of his remarks made this statement:

I want to say here and now that in my humble judgment the railroad companies will be glad to accept the magnificent contribution that was made in the bill as it passed the House.

The president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, Mr. Loree, in a letter dated January 21, 1903, winds up with this statement:

Fully convinced of the absolute justice of my position, and because of my responsibility to the company in accepting the Senate bill after sufficient legislation (which gave the company the $1,500,000) had been secured, I feel obliged to urge either that the Senate provision be restored or that the Baltimore and Ohio be permitted to proceed under the act of February 12, 1901.

Very respectfully,

L. F. LOREE, President.

The president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in a letter bearing the same date, was not quite so positive in his statement. So I took pains to address him a communication on that point, and his reply was as follows, under date of February 17, 1903:

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry I beg to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company would not be satisfied to accept less than the $1,500,000 appropriated in the terminal bill as it passed the Senate, as we consider, in view of the great expense that will be entailed upon our company in making the change from our present site to the proposed union station, that we are entitled to the full amount, the reasons for which are fully set forth in my letter to the chairmen of the conference committees of the Senate and House under date of January 20 last.

Yours, very truly,

A. J. CASSATT, President.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know the exact status of this conference report. When this report was up before, I went very carefully into the reasons why this appropriation, which had been originally given and which had been voted for in the original bill by the gentlemen who compose the conferees to-day, should not be taken away.

I am of the same opinion as I was when that conference report came up the last time, and I think, moreover, that these two railroad companies are possessed of an equity that can be enforced under the bills which were passed February 12, 1901, unless a bill is passed embracing an amicable arrangement. I trust, therefore, that when a vote shall be taken on my proposition to recede, due consideration will be given to the question as to what is just and fair. When we reach a vote, I shall call for the yeas and nays. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. BABCOCK. Five minutes.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, it would be proper——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I must raise the question of order. I can not hear the gentleman who is addressing the House.

Mr. MUDD. I can not hear myself.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that the House be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has twice within the last few days appealed to members to aid in maintaining order. He will make no more appeals of that kind, but will insist, whenever necessary, that all business be suspended till the House is in order, and after order has been restored business will be again suspended whenever necessary. Every member should appreciate the right of every other member to hear what is going on in the way of business before the House and should help in securing that result.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, it would appear from the remarks just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] that my reputation as a prophet from his point of view has been somewhat impaired. I am frank to say that on the 9th day of this month, when this conference report was before the House the last time, I gave utterance to a rather sanguine expression of belief that the conferees would be able to agree at least upon a compromise proposition in case this matter was sent back to conference. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has called the attention of the House to the fact that on the next day, in another body, and he has said it was in the Senate of the United States, a statement was made, not intended, I apprehend, but which he seems to think and some others seem to think may have been properly construed, as a denial of the existence of any fact upon which I had the right to base that expression of opinion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has felt himself called upon to say that he thinks that perhaps the House was somewhat misled by that statement upon my part. Because of that, Mr. Speaker, in fairness to myself, and in frankness to this House, I think it is due that I should say, as I do now say, that that expression of judgment made by me to this House was predicated on a motion made and a roll call taken by the conferees, a memorandum of which, made cotemporaneously with the vote, will be found to-day in the committee room of the District of Columbia of the United States Senate. So, Mr. Speaker, if I was in error in my prophecy; if it was not to be relied upon, it is because my comparative inexperience in legislative bodies led me to think that a vote of one day was a pretty fair index of what a vote would be upon the same proposition on another day under conditions that seemed to me to be unchanged.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand the gentleman from Maryland to say now that he was mistaken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will suspend. The Chair must caution the gentleman from Maryland and other gentlemen that it will not do to be referring to the proceedings of the coordinate branch of Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What I desired to ask the gentleman was this: If there was a vote taken to concur or agree, why was not the report made on that vote?

Mr. MUDD. If I may be allowed to answer that I will say that the House conferees at that time conceived that they were practically acting under instructions, because of the vote, unanimous as we understood it, of the House up to that time on the proposition of what contribution the Government should make to these two railroads.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I understand and appreciate the admonition of the Chair. I have not desired to state anything that took place in conference, and I have not made a very full statement or a too specific statement as it is. I have gone about as far as I apprehend I can go. I could not have said less in justice to myself under the circumstances. I do not wish to be misunderstood, and I do not intend to be misrepresented. I would not have stated that much in reference to the proceedings of the conference but for the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL], which I do not complain of, however, provided I have the opportunity to answer and explain my own position. I merely want to put myself right before this House. I did not undertake to mislead the House. I stated what I had a right to say and a right to believe at the time I made the statement, and when a declaration is made in another body and quoted here, which gentlemen here and elsewhere might consider as a denial of the existence of the facts upon which my judgment was based, I think the House will be inclined to indulge me in saying as much as I have said this morning, notwithstanding the custom or courtesy of silence as to the proceedings before committees in ordinary cases.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

The SPEAKER. How much time?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the gentleman desires ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat interested in the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL], and especially in that portion of the gentleman's statement where he read a letter from the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company saying that they would not be satisfied with the million-dollar contribution. He should have added, provided, of course, they could get a million and a half. I do not suppose there is anybody in the world receiving a gift, charitable or otherwise, of a million dollars who would be satisfied if a million and a half was suspended before him and he was told he could get the million and a half if he did not accept the million.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit again to this House that the history of legislation, both national, State, and municipal, can be searched from the beginning of history to this time, and you can not find anywhere where any city has been as liberal to great railroads entering its borders as we propose to be to these two railroads in the pending bill as it passed the House. And I want to call the attention of this House again to some figures submitted when this matter was last before us; and I do it because a gentleman representing one of these railroad companies has sent out this morning a letter, which I suppose all the members received, criticising and challenging the figures I then gave.

I said then that we had given to these two railroad companies, in addition to the $2,000,000 in money, in addition to the $1,770,000 we propose to expend in putting a magnificent plaza before their depot and maintaining it forever, in addition to the $1,000,000 we propose to expend in building a new bridge in order to relieve the Pennsylvania Railroad Company from the obligations that it assumed when we gave it a bridge before (an obligation to maintain it forever as a highway bridge), in addition to all this, I said, we gave them here in public spaces and streets, free, the terminals for their entire system, excepting what the Baltimore and Ohio buys for its freight yards in Eckington, and I made the statement then that we gave to the Baltimore and Ohio, in land belonging to the public, $1,464,286, and to the Pennsylvania, $1,792,498. Now, those figures have been challenged, and I propose to put in the RECORD a letter over the signature of Maj. John Biddle, Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, in which he states that those figures are correct:

OFFICE OF THE ENGINEER COMMISSIONER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 24, 1903.

Hon. WILLIAM S. COWHERD,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In response to your oral request to Capt. H. C. Newcomer, Corps of Engineers, assistant to the Engineer Commissioner, I have the honor to inform you that the estimate made by this office of the value of public space now occupied by the Baltimore and Ohio and Baltimore and Potomac railroad companies, and also the amount which will be occupied by them under the bill now pending providing for a union station, is as follows:

Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company:
Present occupation	$602,135
Total occupation under pending bill	1,464,280
Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company:
Present occupation	971,912
Total occupation under pending bill	1,792,498

Details of these figures are found in the report of hearings of the House Committee on the District of Columbia on June 14, 1902, on Senate bill 4825, page 66. The occupation under the pending bill is obtained by adding to the present occupation the additional land that is occupied by the railroad companies and subtracting therefrom such land as is restored to public use.

Very respectfully,

JOHN BIDDLE,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Engineer Commissioner, District of Columbia.

It will be noted that in making this computation the Commissioners took the total value of the land belonging to the public, mind you, that the railroads now occupy. They added to that the value of the land that is given in addition in this bill, and they subtracted from it every foot of public space that the railroads surrender up. So I want you to remember that this $2,000,000 gift is a small part of the contribution we are making. We are making a gift of not only $2,000,000 in money, but we are making a gift of $3,256,778 in land. We are making a gift of $1,770,000 in expenses to be borne by the Government and the District, and a gift of $1,000,000 more in the building of a new bridge. Our total contribution to the elevation of these two tracks is over $8,000,000 in money and in land and expenses that the Government and the District are to bear. I challenge you to find anywhere in any town council similar generosity to any favored railroad.

Gentlemen refer to the one city of Philadelphia, where they say the contribution was 50 per cent of the cost of the elevation. I want to say here, and I say it in all kindness, that every man knows if he were going to take a model for municipal government the last city on earth he would take would be the city of Philadelphia. I hold here the report made at the meeting of the railroad commissioners of all the States, held in San Francisco, Cal., in 1901, and I state that according to that report 35 per cent is the average cost of the contribution where municipalities and States give anything, and in most of the States and cities they give nothing; but here, as I showed on the last occasion when this matter was up for debate, the total expense to the railroads, excepting the cost of the station, is only $7,000,000, when you count out our contribution in cash under the House bill; and our expenses $8,000,000. So we pay not 50 per cent, but more than 50 per cent, of the total cost, tunnel and all, when you take out the cost of the depot.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say in frankness to this House that I do not blame the gentlemen from the great State of Pennsylvania for their attempt to get all they can for the benefit of that great road which runs through their State. I have been told, and I believe it be true, that that road is looked upon so highly in that State, as so intimately associated with the government and control of the State, that the citizens feel that anything which is given to the road is given to the State, and we all know that our States are willing to forgive us for any raid on the Treasury if the result of it comes home; but I want to call the attention of the men on this floor from the other 44 States of the Union to this fact, I want to say to you to-day that if you give this extra million, then $750,000 of it is going to come out of the pockets of your people. Not only that, but of the three millions to be given if this motion carries I want you to remember that out the pockets of your constituents you are voting $2,225,000 into the coffers of these great railroads.

I say here and now, there is not a man on this floor, if he were at home sitting as a member of the municipal council in his own city, who would dare to go on record with such a vote, and I want to say further that while the matters which occur here in the District of Columbia frequently receive little attention at home, yet the time is coming when the question of the appropriation of the people's money is going to be inquired into; and when you go on record voting two and a quarter millions of dollars of your people's money—not the money of these citizens in the District, but the money raised by taxes from your constituents—you had best remember that you will have that record to meet in the next campaign, and no man can explain it here or elsewhere. That is the situation as to this bill. The House has been munificent. We have given these gentlemen all they ask, except the extra million dollars. We have put the location where they want it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield two minutes more.

Mr. COWHERD. We put the location just where these people want it, took it away from where the House wished to place it, because we wanted to save $1,600,000 to the people and the District. We have increased the cost to the Government and the District more than a million and a half of dollars, and we think it right the railroads should bear some portion of that. I want to say here and now that I believe this matter could be solved and solved easily if this House would pass a bill providing that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company should remove its tracks and depot from the Mall. Then there would be no further trouble about accepting this.

There is just one further fact that I wish to bring to the attention of the House. In this letter sent out by one of the attorneys for the railroad company, he says the use of the public streets now occupied by the Baltimore and Ohio from the present day to 1910 for the operation of this railroad—and the value of these streets as they stand to-day, mind you, is only one-third of what we are giving them in the pending bill—he asserts that the use of these streets up to 1910 is worth to that railroad $911,234. What, then, will be the value of three times that much land, to be used, not for seven years but to be used for ever and ever, as long as this Government stands? And yet, that enormous contribution they insist should not be considered at all. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MORRELL and Mr. PEARRE rose.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MORRELL. I desire to be recognized in my own time.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman stated he wanted to make a statement. I will yield to him to make a statement.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to claim my own time on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor. He spoke and reserved the balance of his time. The gentleman made a preferential motion.

Mr. MORRELL. I requested to reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman did, the Chair did not understand him.

Mr. MORRELL. That is what I said.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin wish to let the gentleman from Pennsylvania in now?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to a remark which was made in regard to my native city, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he ever heard of the city of St. Louis and the character of the municipal government there? [Laughter on the Republican side.] And also if he had ever heard of the amount of money that had been contributed by this body to the Louisiana Purchase Commission?

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his question?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. I have heard of the city of St. Louis. The city of St. Louis, when its magnificent union station was built, which, I am told, is the finest in the country if not in the world, never contributed a cent; and more than that, some of the railroads have elevated their tracks at their own expense. However corrupt their council has been, they never dared go that far in voting the people's money. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, if it were in order, I should certainly move at this juncture of the proceedings of the House to acquit my colleague [Mr. MUDD] upon his own statement. I should also move a vote of thanks to the gentleman from Missouri for the excellent and impassioned political speech which he has just seen fit to make upon the occasion of the consideration of this bill. I do not see, Mr. Speaker, why it is necessary in the consideration of this business proposition to tear a passion into tatters in the House of Representatives, and by gymnastic gesticulations and bloody faces to try to frighten each other into acceptance of the respective views which we entertain. The gentleman has a reputation as an earnest economist—I refer to the gentleman from Missouri—and I have no doubt that the gentleman's speech on this occasion and the speech that the gentleman made upon the consideration of a previous report of disagreement of this conference will not only add to that reputation for economy, but that perhaps it will commend him to the favor of other gentlemen of the House of Representatives whose duty it is to prevent looting the public Treasury, and who perform that duty to the satisfaction of Congress and the people of the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us take a cursory review of this legislation and try to ascertain in a calm, dispassionate, business discussion of this matter just exactly how it stands. For a large number of years there was some talk and discussion—much talk and discussion—in regard to the elimination of grade crossings in the city of Washington. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad in Washington were not the agitators; they were not the movers and agitators of that subject. The suggestors of that proposition were the committees of Congress in the House and in the Senate and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. That suggestion was a wise one, because it had as its purpose and its projective result the protection and safety of the lives of the citizens of the District of Columbia. But upon the inception of the consideration of that suggestion by Congress and by the public we find what? We find the Pennsylvania Railroad located upon the Mall, with certain rights, which it has secured from the common council, then the municipal government, of the city of Washington, approved by two acts of Congress. We found the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad occupying a central location both for freight and passenger depots with all its crossings at grade. They had certain well-defined rights. The grant to the Pennsylvania Railroad, the easement that it possessed, was an easement in perpetuity. The grant to the Baltimore and Ohio was limited to the year 1910.

As this matter continues to be discussed an agreement is finally reached between the railroad companies on the one hand and the District Commissioners on the other, and the respective Committees on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate. That agreement is embodied in a bill. The railroad companies in all probability could have delayed and postponed and perhaps have defeated any such measure if they had seen fit to make the effort. Fortunately the parties agreed, and that agreement was embodied in the two bills in regard to the two railroads which constituted the legislation of 1901.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PEARRE. I did not interrupt the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman can see that my time is very limited.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. PEARRE. That agreement was embodied in the legislation of 1901. That legislation provided what? It provided for the contribution to the two railroads of one million and a half dollars in value of real estate to the Pennsylvania Railroad and a million and a half dollars in money to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, not solely in consideration of the elimination of the grade crossings and the cost to be charged directly to that, but positively enacted that they should have other considerations which were named in the bill itself for which the District chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House voted and led the fight for its adoption.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit a question?

Mr. PEARRE. If the gentleman chooses to occupy my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will yield to the gentleman all the time that I occupy.

Mr. PEARRE. I yield.

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not think the gentleman wants to mislead the House and to place the committee in a false position. The estimates and figures upon which this contribution was based was made by the Commissioners and the engineers of the two railroads, and related solely to the elevation and elimination of the grade crossings. They are on file in the committee room, and numerous reports showing this to be the fact and that nothing was considered except the elimination of the grade crossings.

Mr. PEARRE. I will come to that, Mr. Speaker, but I will now read from the existing law the act which was approved February 12, 1901, which states the terms of the law, not in terms of the Commissioners' estimate, but in the terms of the law, the considerations upon which this contribution was made.

In consideration of the surrender by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, under the requirements of this act, of its rights under the several acts of Congress heretofore passed, and under its several contracts with the municipal authorities of the city of Washington authorized by said acts of Congress, and in consideration of the large expenditures required for the construction of the new terminals, viaduct, and connecting railroads, as required by this act, to avoid all grade crossings of streets and avenues within the city of Washington; and, further, in consideration of the grant and conveyance to the United States of the lands included within the limits of the roadway and right of way of the Washington Branch Railroad, which can be used for a street or avenue for the public benefit, the sum of $1,500,000, to be paid to said railroad company toward the cost of the construction of said elevated terminals, viaduct, and structures within the city of Washington, shall be, and is hereby, appropriated, one half to be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the other half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Now, that language "verbatim et seriatim" is contained in the bill now under consideration, and I asseverate without fear of successful contradiction that that includes in the statement——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MORRELL. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-seven minutes.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland five minutes more.

Mr. PEARRE. The bill under consideration contains that same statement of consideration. I would say in further reply to the distinguished chairman of the committee that not only does the bill itself specify other considerations for the contribution of $1,500,000, but the reports of both Senate and House committees upon this subject in 1900 recognize other considerations for its payment than the mere one-half of the cost chargeable strictly to the elevation of the tracks.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their report dated February 27, 1900, on Senate bill No. 2329, in the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, to eliminate grade crossings, etc., say:

Considering the advantages which will be derived by said city and the public generally and the vastly greater expense proposed to be incurred by the company than would or could be required if it stood upon its strictly legal rights under the terms of the contract above referred to, and considering also that railways in other cities of the country have been aided by the city or State, or both, in the work of abolishing grade crossings, the Commissioners feel that the request of the company is equitable and not immoderate.

The Senate committee in its report, made by Senator McMillan, upon the pending bill, and dated April 3, 1900, says:

The proposition now is that the United States shall buy, at a fair valuation, this land on which the railroad company has been paying taxes for thirty years, and that the railroad shall use the money so received as a portion of the expense of building a tunnel and making connection with the proposed union station.

This statement does not recognize the cost strictly chargeable to the elimination of grade crossings as part of the consideration for the contribution of $1,500,000 proposed in the pending bill, upon which Senator McMillan was making his report. The distinguished chairman will therefore see that both the bill in its terms and the two committees of the House and Senate recognized other considerations for this contribution than those for which he contends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what Congress said to the railroad companies and what the railroad companies have replied. Congress said in 1901, "You must eliminate these grade crossings." The railroad companies said, "There has been much disagreement between us. We have come to an agreement and conclusion with the District Commissioners; and while we do not need it, while we do not want it, while it will cost much more money than what we might need to expend, if left to ourselves, in consideration of the request of the Commissioners, considering the benefit it will be to the public and the citizens of the District, we will incur the additional expense." "But," said the Congress of the United States to the Pennsylvania Railroad, "you must build a new bridge, and over that new bridge you must permit other railroads to enter into the city of Washington, and you must maintain it for all time." Why? The District of Columbia would have been compelled to build not only a new passenger bridge, but a new vehicular bridge, because it was stated in the report of the Commissioners that a new bridge was essential to save a certain portion of Washington from damage by flood by reason of the breaking up of the ice in the spring.

And therefore, Mr. Speaker, that ought not to be charged against the Pennsylvania Railroad. In addition to that, it says you must take down the Fish Commission building and reerect it, at a cost of $40,000. That was a proposition under the bill of 1901. It said to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad: "You must give up certain advantageous locations here." What did it say to the Pennsylvania Railroad? Did it say, "You must build a station, at the cost of $1,500,000, that will enable you to properly care for the passenger traffic which you have?" Oh, no. It might have been done for $1,000,000, or for $700,000 or $800,000. The Congress of the United States said: "You must expend a million and a half of dollars for an ornamental station." The Pennsylvania Railroad Company agreed to that. What did Congress say to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad? It said: "You must elevate your station."

The bill did not require that any particular amount of money should be expended upon the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad station, but it said, "You must elevate your roads according to plans and details which have been prepared by the District Commissioners." That was agreed to on both sides, not on the request of the company, but very much to its detriment. Under that legislation the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has the right, upon the elevation of its station, without putting more money into the railroad-station building itself than it sees fit to do, to receive from the Treasury of the United States Government $1,500,000. That is the solemn pledge of this Government; that is the deliberate decision and legislation of this House, concurred in by about two-thirds majority.

Our friends on the other side, particularly the gentleman from Missouri, have based their opposition to that legislation upon their desire—I am speaking particularly of the gentleman from Missouri—for a building which would comply with the requirements of æsthetic taste—which would tend to the beautification of the city of Washington. "Do not destroy the Mall; the Mall is sacred; it was the pet of George Washington; do not lay profane hands upon it." That was the cry of the gentleman from Missouri. And during that discussion he almost yielded to the suggestion that he would be willing to give the Pennsylvania Railroad Company $2,000,000 rather than have them occupy any part of the Mall, or in consideration of their leaving the Mall entirely.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a hurried synopsis of the legislation approved February 12, 1901, with regard to the two railroads in relation to the elimination of grade crossings. Upon the approval of this legislation these two companies doubtless began to make their financial arrangements to carry out the project embodied in such legislation. The total cost of carrying out this project of the Commissioners of the District and the Congress of the United States was, according to the estimates, to be $9,992,064, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company being chargeable with $5,995,408 and the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to be chargeable with $4,392,656.

Under the terms of the act the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company was to convey by deed in fee to the Government of the United States the line of its present Washington Branch within the District of Columbia, which is 66 feet wide and 1¼ miles long, and which, according to the estimated value of the property, is worth $531,234. In addition to this it was to release to the Government, by removing its tracks therefrom, the present line of its Metropolitan Branch, from I street to the boundary, and this is the law to-day. The company is also to remove the tracks from New York avenue and First street east on the Metropolitan Branch.

Everybody was supposed to be satisfied, and this long controverted question of the elimination of grade crossings was supposed to have been happily settled. But the Commissioners of the District, the park commission (charged with the beautification of the city), and the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia were not satisfied with this arrangement, for two reasons. First, because that legislation contemplated the enlarged and permanent occupation of the Mall by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; and, second, because it did not provide a union station.

In the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, about a year after the approval of the legislation of February 12, 1901, Senator McMillan, since deceased, and always intelligently devoted to the best interests of the District, reported the present bill from his committee, and in his report said:

This proposition does not come from the railroads. They are satisfied with their present station. When the question of the improvement of the District of Columbia was taken up, the removal of the railroad tracks was considered absolutely essential. The Mall was laid out to form the great approach to the Capitol, and it is impossible to conceive any adequate treatment of the capitol park system without freeing the Mall from the railroad tracks and station. When this view of the situation was placed before the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, he replied, after very careful consideration, that while he did not desire any change, yet he recognized that if Washington is to have the development of a capital city in the true sense of that word the railroad must leave the Mall, and he was willing to accept any adjustment that would be fair to the stockholders whose interests he represented.

From the standpoint of economical railroad management the proposed union station has little to recommend it. The terminal charges are increased from about 40 cents to about $1.20 per passenger car, and there would be no corresponding increase in passengers. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, which does a comparatively small passenger business, claims that it would be much better off by keeping to the C street site provided for in the existing legislation, especially as the contemplated change compels that railroad to give up its present extensive and well-regulated freight yards and purchase city blocks in Eckington.

Here, then, was a new proposition presented to the railroad companies, after their officers had the right to believe that the question of the elimination of the grade crossings in the city of Washington had been settled. In this new proposition what did the Congress of the United States (through its committees) and the District of Columbia (through the Commissioners) say to these two railroad companies? They said: "It is true we secured the passage of the legislation in 1901 upon agreement with you. You accepted it in good part and had good reason to believe that that was the end of the matter. The new proposition embodied in the pending bill does not any more effectually eliminate grade crossings, but is suggested by us for the purpose of beautifying the city, by relieving the Mall of all railroad tracks and stations, and secures a union depot in which all railroads coming into the city will center." The railroad companies naturally replied: "We thought this matter was settled. Your project is an excellent one for the beautification of the city, but gives us no particular advantage that we can see." This is doubtless true. It does not increase the directness of the Pennsylvania Railroad's southern connection, because all the Southern railroads that come into Washington terminate in the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad on Sixth street, under contract with and practically under the control of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It does not shorten the Pennsylvania Railroad's connection for New York and the North for any of its freight business, because under the pending bill passenger trains only are permitted to run through the tunnel provided for in this bill, except in case of emergency defined in this bill. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company does a comparatively small passenger business and has no considerable freight traffic with the South because the Pennsylvania Railroad controls that situation.

The only advantage that either railroad would receive through this legislation over what had already been secured to them by the legislation of 1901, is the shortening of the time for passenger trains of the Pennsylvania Railroad between Washington and New York by about ten minutes. This bill increases the total cost of the project of the elimination of grade crossings, according to the estimates, to at least $15,450,487, distributable as follows: $5,883,550 payable by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, $7,966,926 payable by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and $1,600,000 payable by the District for grading, purchase of property, and damages in constructing a magnificent plaza park, not for the benefit of the railroad companies nor to meet the reasonable requirements of public traffic, but for the beautification of the city. This includes a $4,000,000 station house and train sheds, the cost of which is fixed at that figure in the bill, the whole of which is to be borne by the companies in equal proportions, and $1,649,050, the cost of the tunnel required by this new plan, which is to be borne in the same way. The whole difference between the cost of the project embodied in the legislation of 1901 and that required under the pending bill would be, according to the estimates, $5,458,423, all of which, except the plaza improvement of $1,600,000, is to be borne by the two railroad companies, something like $2,000,000 of the additional expenses being borne by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and nearly $3,500,000 being borne by the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The distinguished chairman of the District Committee [Mr. BABCOCK] argues that in the division of costs the cost of the tunnel, the increase of the cost of the terminal building, the line to Magruder for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the cost of coach yards must be eliminated, and that these items must be charged as betterments to the railroad companies, not being, as he says, connected in any way with the elimination of the grade crossings.

Why the Congress of the United States in carrying out a project for the beautification of the city, not at the request of the railroad companies nor for the benefit of the public, but in contravention of its solemn enactments of 1901, should compel these companies to meet an additional expense of over $5,000,000 is hard to conceive; as it is equally difficult to understand why a $4,000,000 station—which before being completed will come near costing $5,000,000, as Senator McMillan says in his report—and a tunnel costing $1,649,000 should be charged against these companies as betterments.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the original motive of all legislation upon this subject was to protect the lives of the citizens of the District by eliminating grade crossings. The legislation of 1901 required the railroads to do this, and certainly not in a niggardly way, requiring, as it did, the Pennsylvania Railroad to expend $1,500,000 for an ornamental station at the Mall.

If the Congress of the United States simply desires to accomplish this original purpose it is only fair that, when the companies carry out, in a way prescribed by law, under plans agreed upon by the Commissioners of the District and the railroad companies, proper plans for the elimination of grade crossings, they should have the right to exercise their own discretion and judgment as to the character and cost of their terminal-station building. If they were permitted to do this, they could certainly meet the needs of public traffic amply without erecting a $4,000,000 union station and constructing a tunnel at a cost of more than $1,600,000. Why compel them to do this and then reduce the amount of the contribution? What right has Congress to take the property of these companies without consideration or proper compensation, as it will do by compelling them to make this tunnel and erect this $4,000,000 station? I assert, as a matter of law, that Congress can not do it without the consent of the companies.

The legislation of 1901 went beyond what was necessary to secure the elimination of grade crossing, by requiring the Pennsylvania Railroad to erect a monumental station, at a cost of $1,500,000, in order to relieve the streets and other portions of the Mall occupied under that legislation by the station and terminals of that company. The portion of that legislation giving the Pennsylvania Railroad the use of about 14 acres of the Mall is to be repealed by the pending bill, and the pretended necessity or reason for imposing this great cost for a station upon the Pennsylvania Railroad disappears. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, this whole project of tunnel and union station is a financial obligation imposed upon these companies by Congress simply because it has the power to do it. The companies, through their officers, in endeavoring to meet the views of the Commissioners, the Park Commission, and the Senate and House committees, have shown a commendable spirit in acquiescing in these costly designs, with an additional burden of over $5,000,000, and the reason for the reduction of the $3,000,000 allowed to these two companies in equal proportions by the legislation of 1901 does not in any just sense appear. If this House should insist upon its disagreement with the Senate, and the Senate should finally yield, it would appear to a fair-minded man something like the story of the spider and the fly.

The legislation of 1901 was a completed fact and the matter considered closed. The Senate committee, the Park Commission, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, after giving absolute assurance to these two companies that there should be no disturbance of the amount of the Government's contribution of land and money to the two companies, ask them to consent to the reopening of this matter and the enlargement of the project in cost and character; and after these roads under this assurance agree, every gentleman who wants to make a factitious reputation for economy plunges in to break the agreement of Congress (made in the legislation of 1901) and violate the assurance of the bodies I have just referred to by cutting down the contribution of the two roads. Such a proposition violates the faith of the House and contains no suggestion of justice.

It is contended by the distinguished chairman of the committee that the lowering of the grade of the viaduct within the city by 10 feet, and the shortening of the terminal construction by reason of its location at Massachusetts avenue instead of C street (about two blocks) under the pending bill, will reduce the cost of construction to these companies. This is true, but this reduction is compensated for by the deeper cut required through the high land north of Florida avenue and the greater amount of excavation, increased slopes, and protection to accommodate the deeper cut, which, according to reliable estimates, will be over $215,000.

Moreover, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company loses the great advantage of a central location of its freight depots within the city, at the junction of Delaware avenue and H street. It is estimated by the officers of that company that the surrender of this location (provided for under the legislation of 1901) and the removal of their freight station to Eckington (some distance outside of the city) will amount to $100,000 a year, at least, which is the interest at 4 per cent on $2,500,000. These officers claim that the books of the company show that the item of the shipment of beef and raw meats alone amounts to $400 a day to the company.

With the removal of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company's freight station to Eckington and the retention by the Pennsylvania Railroad of its freight terminals in the city, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company will lose this traffic entirely, because it can not compete with the Pennsylvania Railroad in these shipments, for the reason that all fresh or Western meats will be shipped to the station nearest the points of delivery in the city, to prevent the deterioration of these meats in the transfer from refrigerated cars, in nonrefrigerated wagons, to the refrigerators at the various points of delivery. Moreover, it is claimed, with much show of reason, by the officers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company that their surrender, under the legislation of 1901 and this bill, of their right to remain at grade until 1910 would amount to about $941,000, being the interest at 4 per cent for four years on $5,883,550, the total cost of construction chargeable against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

This is based upon the statement that the construction will be completed within three years, but that the cost thereof will not be incurred and completely paid for within three years, but fixing 1905 as the time at which the interest should begin, and allowing one year for removal, the interest would amount to the figure I have given. The gentleman from Missouri was, in 1901, especially desirous of the removal of tracks from the Mall. In this bill his desire is carried out, and that of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS rose.

Mr. PEARRE. I have not time to yield.

Mr. SIMS. You are now going back on what you voted for yourself.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman will have to respond in his own time.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. PEARRE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland seven minutes more.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman desired especially that the Mall should be relieved, that we might have an unbroken prospect from the Capitol of the United States to the Monument——

Mr. SIMS rose.

Mr. PEARRE. I have already said that I decline to yield.

Mr. SIMS. But now you have additional time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland has declined to yield.

Mr. PEARRE. The gentleman will have time of his own in which to reply to anything I may say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the whole opposition of gentlemen to the measure then before the House was based upon their demand for an unbroken prospect from the Capitol of the United States to the Monument, and thence to the White House. They have it by this bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] is out of order. The gentleman from Maryland has declined to yield.

Mr. COWHERD. I appeal to the gentleman that he shall not misstate the facts about me in this matter and then decline to yield for a correction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland has once given notice that he declines to yield. Does he now yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PEARRE. I decline to yield. The gentleman will have an opportunity to reply; and I call his attention to the fact that I have made no misstatement of fact.

Mr. COWHERD. Then why not permit me to make a correction?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order.

Mr. PEARRE. I said that the gentleman's chief objection to the bill under consideration heretofore was the occupation of the Mall. Does he deny it? He does not. Further than that I charge and asseverate that the gentleman almost agreed—those were my terms—was almost persuaded to agree to the suggestion that he would be willing that that company should have $2,000,000 if it would get off the Mall entirely, and I could produce the RECORD to that effect.

Mr. COWHERD. I agree to that now.

Mr. PEARRE. Then the very ground for the gentleman's opposition, it seems to me, has disappeared, except this figmentary, fragmentary, and fictitious estimate of his with regard to the expense which the District of Columbia and the Government will have to bear. Why, sir, the mathematics of the gentleman are beautiful to sustain his own argument. But they will not accord, I respectfully submit, with reason and logic. He charges, forsooth, $1,464,280 as a gift of land to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. I ask the gentleman to find any such provision in the bill. Let him call the attention of the House to any clause in that bill which makes any gift of anything to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, or any other railroad, outside the contribution they make. The gentleman can not do it.

Much stress has been laid by the gentleman in his estimate upon the alleged contribution by the Government to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad of street space. He contends that over $1,400,000 of land is contributed to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company by the Government in this way. In regard to this matter the Commissioners of the District, in their report, dated February 6, 1900, on the legislation of 1901, say: "In the above statement the portions of streets abandoned to the uses of the railway company are not charged against the company, for the reason that public traffic will not be interferred with by such closure, there being no traffic over the portions closed excepting in connection with the railroad, and, of course, ample lines of ingress and egress for this purpose will be provided by the company. It would be an expense to the public to keep them open without any corresponding advantage, and it is believed that the company should be required to maintain and care for them at its own expense."

There is no gift. There is an easement given, the right to use streets; and upon that right both these companies will have to pay largely increased taxation. The taxable value of the Baltimore and Ohio property at its station at present is about $80,000. What will it be under this new legislation? Its share of the increased assessment upon the terminals and the station is certainly $2,000,000; and the bill provides in broad, comprehensive terms, applicable to both roads, that the improvements on this land shall be subject to taxation, only excusing them from additional charges by reason of the elevated structures, terminals, bridges, etc., such as is customary in all the States in legislation of this kind. Therefore there is no gift of land to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. There is a gift of the user of land, and they have to pay taxes upon that gift of user, and that user or easement is revocable, because the bill provides in terms that Congress reserves the right to amend or repeal this legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a million in money charged. That is true. There is $996,000 for the long passenger bridge. If you will look through the documents connected with this matter, you will find that there are recommendations here from officers of the Government to the effect that it would be necessary to have a new bridge there anyhow. That bridge was given to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in 1871, when the citizens of Washington wanted to induce the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to come into the District of Columbia. A charge was imposed upon that gift to the effect that the railroad company must maintain it in good order, not only for railroad purposes, but for passenger and vehicular purposes, between the Virginia and the Maryland shores. That bridge will have to be built whether this legislation passes or not. Everybody knows that.

We have to have a new bridge there whether it be a passenger or a railroad bridge; but this charge is made against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has to build a magnificent bridge of its own. It has to build that bridge according to the terms of this bill. See what the bill says—the legislation to which gentlemen of the House have given their unqualified approval by a two-thirds majority: "Inasmuch as the present Long Bridge over the Potomac River is inadequate" you said, "inadequate for the accommodation of the largely increased railroad and vehicular traffic, is in a measure obstructive of navigation," said the Congress of the United States. And what business is it of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company whether it is obstructive of navigation or not? What interest has the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in the proposition as to whether it will not meet the demands of the passenger and vehicular traffic? That is a matter for the people of the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

An additional element of cost, one-half of which is chargeable against this company under the pending bill, would be the elevated structure from the mouth of the tunnel to a connection with the terminal. This cost, to be borne equally by the two companies, is estimated at $200,000, and is not, of course, incurred under the legislation of 1901.

With reference to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it is admitted that the increased cost to that company by the pending bill over the legislation of 1901 is $3,314,625. Why should these companies be compelled to bear these additional costs to carry out a plan for the beautification of the city which will not more completely eliminate grade crossings than the legislation of 1901, will not specially increase the facilities to the public, and will not gain a single passenger or a single dollar of revenue for them?

Lieut. Col. Charles J. Allen, of the Corps of Engineers, and Brig. Gen. John M. Mason, Chief of Engineers, in a report upon the legislation of 1901, dated January 25, 1900, state that the project for the reclamation of Potomac Flats, which was authorized by act of Congress August 7, 1882, provides—

> For the rebuilding of Long Bridge at an early period during the progress of the improvement, with wide spans upon piers offering the least obstruction to the flow of water, and also for the interception of all sewage discharged into the Washington channel and its conveyance to James Creek sewer canal.

Also:

> That the necessity for rebuilding the Long Bridge with broad spans, so as to provide for the better flow of water, has long been recognized, and, in fact, the reclamation of the flats and the improvement of the Virginia channel have been carried on with the understanding that the bridge would at an early day be reconstructed so as to remove the obstruction of the passage of floods resulting from these piers and the slight elevation of its bottom chord above low water.

The Commissioners of the District, in their report dated February 6, 1900, on the proposed legislation of 1901, say:

> The Long Bridge is notoriously inadequate, and a modern bridge for railway and highway traffic is most urgently needed.

It thus appears, not that the Pennsylvania Railroad needs a new and costly bridge to enter the District of Columbia, but that the Government, to protect a portion of the District, had determined long since that a new bridge was necessary and would have to be built, and the opportunity presenting itself in this bill, they compelled the railroad company to build it without any reference to the eliminating of grade crossings, and will determine by this legislation to build a passenger bridge for the same reasons.

The Pennsylvania Railroad now occupies, if I remember rightly, some 5 or 6 acres of the Mall. The legislation of 1901 allowed the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to take over 14 acres out of the center of the Mall, so it is stated by Colonel Bingham in his report upon this subject dated January 18, 1900. The partial protection of this Mall was the reason for requiring the Pennsylvania Railroad to erect a new station at a cost of $1,500,000. Many gentlemen opposed the legislation in 1901 because it allowed the use of so much land on the Mall to the Pennsylvania Railroad. This bill recovers all that land in the Mall, clears it entirely of railroads, and compels the Pennsylvania Railroad to give up the most convenient railroad station (within a block of Pennsylvania avenue and in the heart of the city) that could possibly be desired, after that location had been assured it by the legislation of 1901.

If it were a good argument against the legislation of 1901 that the Mall should not be desecrated, its restoration under the pending bill should certainly speak loudly in favor of its passage. The distinguished chairman of the committee lays much stress upon the fact that the railroad companies originally filed plans for a union station at C street, with which plans the House Committee for the District of Columbia agreed, and endeavors to deduce some kind of argument against these companies on that ground. It is true, I believe, that the companies did (through their engineer officers) file such plans, and that the House committee at the time preferred the C street location for a union depot; but this was contrary to the plan for the beautification of the city, which Senator McMillan, the Senate committee, the park commission, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia had in mind when the pending bill was projected, and the companies yielded to the arguments and persuasions of these gentlemen for the æsthetic improvement of the city. Suppose the companies did file plans and agree to a union depot at C street, are they to be punished on that account? What motive can there be for the imposition of the penalty of $1,000,000 reduction in the original contribution to them simply because they yielded to the suggestions of the gentlemen I have named to aid in the perfecting of a park system and the erection of a monumental station building?

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored in a desultory way to dissipate some of the misapprehensions that have arisen in the discussion of this matter. If this legislation fails, and fail it will, I believe, unless the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] prevails, the companies will have the right to proceed under the legislation of 1901 to the erection of separate stations. Fourteen acres of the Mall will be occupied forever, and the grand park scheme, of which it is a part, will be destroyed. The union station will be lost, and the hope of the most magnificent railway station and terminal in the world will have disappeared forever. Can the House of Representatives in the closing session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, with these grand consummations in sight, afford to quibble about the contribution of $1,000,000 toward them, especially when that $1,000,000 was guaranteed by the legislation of 1901, and no good reason appears for a breach of the faith of the House involved in the reduction of the same? In my judgment it can not. I shall therefore vote for the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede from the House amendments and concur in the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he use some of his time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I think we are pretty nearly ready for a vote. I know of only one gentleman who desires to speak.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have five minutes' time, inasmuch as I could not get a question answered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the committee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] a courteous and kind question. He is a fellow-member of this committee. I asked him, or wanted to ask a question, and he declined to yield. His time was extended, and he further declined to yield. I would now ask, What is the matter with the gentleman from Maryland in that he does not want a question asked him by a fellow-member of the committee? Are you afraid to give information? Are you afraid to answer?

Mr. PEARRE. If it will do the gentleman any good, I would state that almost anybody is afraid of the temper of the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman would not permit me to interrupt him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SIMS. When this matter was acted upon by the Committee of the District of Columbia, a motion was made—if I am not telling committee secrets—to reduce the amount carried in the Senate bill $1,000,000, and it was voted down. Then a member of the committee moved to reconsider, with a solemn pledge that every member of the committee would support the bill if that amendment went on, and we thought every member meant what he said and was in good faith.

Mr. PEARRE. Does the gentleman mean to say that I voted for that proposition?

Mr. SIMS. If you were present.

Mr. PEARRE. I want to say to the gentleman that I was present and that I did not vote for any such proposition.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. OLMSTED. My point of order is that occurrences in the committee are not in order here.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and there never was a better illustration of it than we have now.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not speaking alone of the gentleman, but this morning we have had evidence of that very difficulty. Allusion has been made to what occurred in the committee. That is something with which the House has nothing to do. It has to do only with the results.

Mr. SIMS. But, Mr. Speaker, when a committee allows outsiders to sit right there and report every word that happens, I want to know why a member of the House can not do it.

Mr. PEARRE. I mean to say that if the gentleman states that I did anything of the sort, he states what is not true, and he knows it.

Mr. SIMS. I never said a word about the gentleman. You are not an outsider. You are a member of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Discussion of matters in committee is not in order.

Mr. SIMS. I only wanted to state this in explanation——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not listen to any explanation. The gentleman will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. SIMS. When we came in here we voted for this amendment solidly, without an exception that I remember. I am not intending to misstate anything, but I am liable to forget.

Mr. PEARRE. Well, you have forgotten.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I have a right to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] has twice disputed my word. I want to say to him that I did not intend to misstate anything. If he were not present at the time referred to, or if he voted otherwise, I was mistaken in it, and he could have said so. There is a gentlemanly way to do it. That is all of it. I say now that if I made a misstatement——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is stating a question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMS. I am too well known in this House for any gentleman to think I would misstate him intentionally. The gentleman from Maryland understood that. We have the best personal relations, but there is a gentlemanly way to deny these things, and one that no man resents, and I do not. I say if I misstate, I am sorry for it. I did not intend to, and if he is the gentleman I have always taken him to be he will accept that, and if he does not, I do not care. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEARRE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. I did not charge the gentleman with having deliberately made a misstatement. I simply desire to say for the gentleman's benefit that if he means to say that I acquiesced in that proposition in the committee that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. SIMS. I beg your pardon sincerely and accept your word for it.

Mr. PEARRE. And I want to say further that I do not think my personal relations with the gentleman are such as would justify him in commenting upon my knowledge of gentility and courtesy; and if he means to say anything of that sort, I would only respond by saying that I certainly should not go to the gentleman for any lessons in those matters.

Mr. SIMS. I do not ask the gentleman to do so.

The SPEAKER. Now everything is delightful [laughter], and the Chair hopes the debate will proceed in order.

Mr. SIMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is in order, and will proceed.

Mr. SIMS. When the amendment was brought in here of $1,000,000 reduction to the Senate bill, it was voted on separately. Was there a mortal man that voted against that amendment? If there is, let him rise; I do not want to misstate him. We unanimously voted for it, with all the information that any gentleman now has. Why, then, the change? The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] and myself stood up here and fought the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who wanted to knock out the expensive but very beautiful plaza, and we did it solely because we felt in honor bound to live up to all understandings made elsewhere. We had all the information then we have now. Every member of this committee had all the information then that he has now. Why now does any member of this committee come in here and ask this House to reflect upon information heretofore given and votes heretofore taken by going back upon that solemn vote of this House?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MORRELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. LATIMER. I want some time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] has five minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, after a careful examination of this bill and of the amendment which is under consideration, I have concluded to vote to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate. I am not frightened by the language of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], whom I do not now see, as to the account which I will have to make to my constituents if I vote for this bill. I might retort upon the gentleman that upon one occasion he voted for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the St. Louis Exposition, a great work, and one which I am not depreciating.

But at the same time I believe that this is legislation in the interest of beautifying the city of Washington, which is very dear to me, as to other Virginians. It is a work which will benefit my constituents and will benefit the constituents of many gentlemen in this House. I can not see from the statements which have been made heretofore by both sides on this question that the railroads are attempting to take anybody by the throat. As I understand it, this legislation was not inaugurated by the railroads. They were perfectly willing to accept the bill which was passed two years ago. They did not ask for a union station. This union station was asked for by the park commissioners of the District of Columbia and by the District of Columbia government and by certain gentlemen of both Houses. If this is true, why say that the railroads are undertaking to grab something to which they are not entitled? We are told by the gentleman from Missouri that it will cost a great deal more to have a union station now than it would to have separate stations.

If that is true, if it costs the railroads $500,000 more apiece than the committee has given to them, that is the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House, to build the station than it did before, why is it in this case that these gentlemen now are unwilling to give them this additional amount? They gave the Baltimore and Ohio $1,500,000 two years ago. They gave the Pennsylvania Railroad land valued at about that amount; and if so, why do we now take back what we have heretofore done, by trying to terrify gentlemen, by trying to make gentlemen believe that they are going to lose votes at home because they vote what they believe to be right in a matter of business? This is asked for in reality by the park commissioners and the District Commissioners because, I understand, they desire this union station. I am informed further that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad are both willing to have the bill which was passed two years ago to remain upon the statute books and to operate under that bill; that it is cheaper for them to do so. That being the case, and believing that the expenditure of this sum of money will be to the interest of the District of Columbia, will be to the interest of my constituents, and that it will be for the beautifying of this beautiful city, I shall vote with the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], a member of the committee.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I think this House is pretty well informed in regard to the provisions of this bill, and the conditions that exist; but before we come to a vote, being a member of the District Committee, and also one of the conferees, I desire to make a simple statement to the House. Gentlemen, for thirty years we have been trying to get legislation here that would be satisfactory to the District of Columbia and to the country at large. We have failed up to date. The people of the District and the members of this House object to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company occupying the Mall. We passed a bill two years ago giving them the right to come in on an elevated track, and continue the use of the Mall, and to build a station there that would cost a million and a half dollars. Now, as has been stated, we give a million and a half dollars to each railroad in substance in the bill we passed February 12, 1901. This law is now in force. I am a member of the District Committee; we were not satisfied with existing legislation, and our committee reported a new bill to this House providing for a union station, cutting down the amount that the Government would pay and making it $2,000,000 instead of $3,000,000, according to the Senate bill.

I say to you here to-day that we either want legislation or we do not, and if we are to have legislation we ought to take some action in this House that will accomplish that legislation. The Senate is standing firm by its bill, claiming a million and a half for each road. Now, my position is that these conferees ought to be sent back to conference, without instructions by the House, and I believe we will get legislation that will be satisfactory to the House, to the District of Columbia, and to the country at large. For you will see that much of the trouble in our last conference was that I for one took it that we were instructed when we left this House. Therefore we reached no agreement. The Senate is firm in its position and the House is firm in its. Now, let the conferees go back and I believe an agreement will be reached. Gentlemen, if we want legislation we can get it. Both of these railroads say they are willing to keep the legislation they now have. The Baltimore and Ohio road claims that they have spent over a million dollars in the purchase of land for the purpose of carrying out the legislation we gave them two years ago.

Mr. COWHERD. Let me say to the gentleman that that is to be sold back to the city.

Mr. LATIMER. I say to the House that if we propose to get legislation during this Congress let these conferees go back to conference without instructions. This is a great business proposition. Every prominent man with whom I have come in contact in this District wants a union station. I believe that a majority of this House want a union station. If you want that union station, send these conferees back without instructions, and, in my judgment, we will get legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, there has been a spirit of acrimony thrown into this debate which is unfortunate and unusual in this House. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] in the course of his remarks went entirely outside of the limit of proper debate, and branded the city of Philadelphia as the most corrupt city in municipal government in this country.

Mr. COWHERD. I did not; I said that nobody would take it as a model.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood the gentleman to say that it was the most corrupt city in municipal government in the country.

Mr. COWHERD. I did not intend to say that; but if I did, I do not retract it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when my colleague asked him about St. Louis he said it had not contributed to the steam railways, but there are other railways that exist in cities for the transportation of passengers, and I would like the gentleman to make some statement in regard to corruption and the men who have just been convicted in the worst scandal that has ever involved any municipal government for many years; and I would further like to call his attention to the fact that if Philadelphia was badly governed, it was through her detective force that one of the embezzlers from St. Louis was arrested and sent back that he might be convicted. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, this charge on the city of Philadelphia was unwarranted and out of the way, and had nothing to do with this debate. But I will say in regard to the very question under discussion that Philadelphia did contribute to the elevation of the tracks in that city in contradistinction to that of St. Louis. Why? Because the citizens felt the same way that the citizens do in the District of Columbia—that we are always willing to assist the public spirit of any corporation or any association which wishes to do things for the general good; and no greater good can be done than the elevation of the railway tracks in a large and populous city so as to preserve the lives and limbs of the people. You can pick up the public press any day and you will see numerous accidents all over the country which occur at these grade crossings. So the gentleman ignores the scandal of the city near which he lives and must be responsible for in some degree, as much as we hold ourselves responsible for the great city of Philadelphia. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] when he opened this discussion in advocacy of his motion to concur. I only want to say, in regard to his allusion to myself, that I have a vote in this House. I do not know whether I will ever have the confidence of my fellow-members in another Congress, at another time, so as to be chosen to preside or not. That cuts no figure; it will care for itself when the time comes, and if, perchance, it should so turn out, I will follow my best judgment, without fear, and perform the duties of that place when the time comes to the best of my ability. [Applause.]

As to my duty now, it is to add my voice for or against the gentleman's motion according to my judgment and conscience, acting for myself. That I shall do. Now, what is this proposition? To agree to a Senate amendment.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is an amendment of the House to the Senate bill.

Mr. CANNON. An amendment of the House to the Senate bill, and the Senate disagreed to it, a difference of a million dollars between the two bodies. Now, in cold blood, I want to inquire a minute as to the merits of the proposition. You always have to read proposed legislation in the light of what has passed, and especially in the light of what has passed at the present session of Congress. Two years ago Congress legislated for the purpose of getting an elevation of tracks. One depot was to be built on the Mall and the other one at C street. The two companies at that time did not agree. There never had been a time up to that time that these two companies, the two great railway companies, could agree or listen to a question of a union depot. Never. Afterwards, I think, to state an open secret, there was such a community of interest created touching the stock of these two great companies, to say the least of it, that their management is now entirely harmonious. [Laughter.] If you tickle one, the other sneezes. [Laughter.] That is an open secret.

I am not abusing them for it. But when this time came, after the legislation of two years ago, then they began to talk about a union depot, and these people began to be "forced" and "forced." Is there a line of law on the statute book that "forces" them then or now? Not one—not one—not one. In all the time that has passed since the enactment of 1901 they have had full power to proceed under that legislation to construct their respective depots and elevate the tracks. Have they done it? No. Are they going to do it? No. Any man can see that who wears spectacles—more pairs than I—let alone with the naked eye.

Now, what happens at this session? There came in here a bill passed by the Senate, amended by the House. It provided for a plaza park in front of this union depot. That did not meet my approval as an individual. I thought it was an unnecessary expense put upon the District and upon the Treasury. I antagonized it. But I found the House Committee on the District of Columbia an absolute unit in opposing my antagonism. I asked one of the members of that committee—not in committee, for I do not belong to that committee—"Why does your committee stand together in this way?" "For the reason," was the reply, "that this committee reports without dissent in favor of cutting down by a million dollars from the donation out of the Treasury to these two companies." And to secure that, the committee comes absolutely together; and that ends it. I antagonized the proposition as best I could. I was beaten, as I have frequently been beaten; that is, I voted with the minority.

Now, another thing. It is an open secret—and I say it respectfully, without criticism, because people interested in legislation have the right by all proper means to make their power and influence and judgment felt—it is an open secret that the representatives of these two great corporations—or one great corporation if they are one—were doing all that they legitimately could to pass that bill through the House, or aid in its passage with the House amendment. The District of Columbia Committee was solid. The bill was passed. It went to the Senate. The Senate refused to agree to our action. The bill came back to the House and went to conference, and on conference report of disagreement the House discussed it, as the House always does matters of difference. When we differ with the Senate we discuss. We discussed this proposition and voted upon it, and stood by the House amendment.

Now, speaking with entire respect of the general practices of another body—not criticising—suffice it to say that, following the practice that is rarely "honored in the breach," that body, as a fact, never had discussed the merits of this proposition—never. They did not discuss it, as the RECORD will disclose, when they disagreed to the House amendment. They did not discuss its merits when the matter came back on the conference report. "The Senate further insist" is the record. And now the matter comes back again. I hope it will never come here again. My judgment is that if you knock off the other $2,000,000 "not all the king's horses or all the king's men"—I know they are across the ocean, some distance off—can keep these companies from accepting the legislation gladly. [Applause.] Things are not now as they were when the legislation was had two years ago. We are making liberal donations to these companies. I believe with the gentleman from Missouri that we are contributing fully half, and more, too, to the elevation of the tracks and the construction of the tunnel, including the plaza park. We have relieved these companies from taxation for their elevation. It is simply taxed as a highway. They have been treated well. Enough is as good as a feast.

> O! it is excellent
> To have a giant's strength; but tyrannous
> To use it like a giant.

Speaking for myself, I want to say, from my standpoint, that it is not politic for these great corporations to insist upon this extra million. [Applause.] They are free to insist. They manage their own matters. We manage ours. They have a right to manage their matters as they choose. But the doors of the Treasury and the revenues of the District of Columbia can not swing open at the dictation of a coordinate branch of Congress [applause]—can not swing open at the dictation of any private citizen unless, exercising the trust that we do for 80,000,000 people, we give the legal key to open the door by our votes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have two minutes more.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, following our judgments and our consciences, it is for us to unlock those doors, as we shall answer to ourselves and answer to an intelligent public sentiment. [Applause.]

Much has been said as to what other cities have done. That does not make a great deal of difference. The question is, What ought we to do? In the city of Chicago, as my colleague [Mr. MANN] has just said, the railways have within ten years paid out $22,000,000 for track elevation, and the city not a cent; and they are already making preparation to pay out $11,000,000 more. Well, that was good work upon the part of the city. Philadelphia, it is stated, donated one-half of such expenses in that city. I am not here to criticise Philadelphia. I do not know what caused that city to do it. St. Louis contributed nothing for similar work. The cities that have contributed, contributed only about 35 per cent.

We contribute, without this increase of this million of dollars, over one-half; and that is enough, in my judgment; and for one I trust that if the House further insists, as I hope and believe it will, upon its disagreement with the Senate, that that will end it. Oh, but says some one, Will they take it? Will they take it! Will a duck swim? [Laughter.] Will a stone when released from an elevation go, under the law of gravitation, toward the center of the earth? "So much I have," they could well exclaim, "and by the grace of one branch of Congress, or of two, it costs nothing to play for the other million, and we make the play." [Laughter.] Gentlemen, let's call them here and now! [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would ask how much more time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER. Twenty minutes.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to have just a word or two before this discussion closes. I listened with great pleasure to the earnest speech of the eloquent gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD], as I always do when he speaks, but I think that he did not thoroughly state the proposition which is before this House. I think that the question before the House is a much simpler question than the one discussed by my friend from Missouri. I joined in the enthusiasm, too, with which the House always greets the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who has just taken his seat; but I do not think that he, either, has fairly stated the exact question which is before the House. The question is, Shall there be contributed to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in connection with the elevation of their tracks and the erection of a union station, one million dollars each or one and a half million dollars each?

The Senate and the District Commissioners say it ought to be one and a half millions of dollars. The House insists that it ought to be only $1,000,000. Now, that is the only question before us, and it seems to me that it may be solved and fairly solved by a brief recital of what precedes this Senate bill. Some thirty years ago or more the Pennsylvania Railroad Company entered the District of Columbia. I do not know how long ago the Baltimore and Ohio also entered the District of Columbia. They are both here by virtue of legislation, and they have expended large sums of money. They do not owe the District anything particularly nor does the District owe them anything particularly. They have each contributed to the welfare of the other. In the meantime Washington has been growing in population. Great crowds come here on various occasions, for Washington has become a convention city, and therefore it became necessary in the interests of human life, in the interests of business, that the tracks of these two companies in the District should be elevated.

The companies and the Congress of the United States came together. They made a bargain. That bargain is represented by the legislation of 1901. Whether it was a good bargain for the railroad companies or a good bargain for the District of Columbia is now wholly irrelevant. Under the terms of that bargain, embodied in that legislation, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was to elevate its tracks and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company was to elevate its tracks; the Pennsylvania Railroad Company was to build a depot on the Mall and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company a depot on C street. It was agreed that a fair division of the cost would give to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company a million and a half of dollars in property and to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company a million and a half of dollars in money. Now, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, that is existing law. Under the existing law the tracks are to be raised, the depot is to be built on the Mall, the other tracks are to be raised and the depot is to be built on C street. Now, why any necessity for additional legislation? Because a grand scheme for the beautification of this capital city has been entered upon. Listen to me for a moment while I read:

> The new station will be the finest structure of its kind in the world. Its length will be 760 feet, which is 8 feet 8 inches longer than the Capitol itself. It will be built of white marble, with the interior of marble and stone—and so on. A palatial building, palatial in conception, in proportions, and in beauty.

Now, then, the park commissioners, the gentlemen interested in the beautification of this national capital, say to the railroad companies, We do not want you to carry out the scheme of 1901;

we have a new scheme and a better scheme and we want you to join us in it. Now, that brings us to just a single question, and it is the kernel of this case. Will it cost the railroad companies any more to carry out this new scheme than it would cost to carry out the old scheme? That is the only question. This is not a question of a giant cruelly exercising a giant's strength. It is a question of simple justice. True, these are railroad corporations, but they are just as much entitled to justice at the hands of this House as the humblest or the loftiest citizen in the land. Now, can they carry out this scheme upon the terms upon which they agreed to carry out the scheme embodied in the legislation of 1901?

I say no, they can not. Before I come to that, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would have you believe that this union depot scheme is a scheme of the railroad companies. Mr. Cassatt, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, than whom a more reputable gentleman does not live, says that they had nothing at all to do with it and that they prefer existing legislation. Mr. Loree, the president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, an equally reputable gentleman, says the same thing.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DALZELL. I can not be interrupted. I have only seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. DALZELL. The Senate committee report:

> This proposition does not come from the railroads. They are satisfied with their present situation. From the standpoint of economical railroad management the proposed union station has little to recommend it. The terminal charges are increased from about 40 cents to about $1.20 per passenger car, and there will be no corresponding increase in the passengers.

Now, can they carry out this scheme without additional cost? I call attention to the statement of Mr. Cassatt. I will put the figures in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I should like one minute more.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. The total cost to the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad, which is the Pennsylvania Railroad, under the pending bill is $7,966,926; cost under the act of February 12, 1901, $4,392,656; total excess of cost to the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad, $3,574,270. Under these circumstances I put it to your consciences as intelligent legislators whether it is anything more than just that that million and a half of dollars provided for by the Senate bill and recommended by the District Commissioners be allowed to stand in that bill to the credit of that company.

Upon the other hand, so far as the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is concerned, I find their estimate of the total cost under the bill now pending is $5,756,550; cost under the act of February 12, 1901, $5,599,498, or an excess of cost of $157,142.

Now, one other matter. I can not understand the figures of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. I find here the District Commissioners' estimate of the cost of work to be done by the railroad companies is $13,073,103; work to be done by the District of Columbia, with damages to property, $1,770,000, or $14,843,103 altogether, of which the railroad companies bear $11,073,103.

I appeal to you, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, to be just; I do not ask you to be generous. I am not here asking for anything that these people have not shown that they are entitled to; and if from any motives other than those of dealing out exact justice we fail to legislate as we ought to legislate on this occasion, it will be to the disgrace and shame of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. I should like to ask the chairman of the conference committee if he is going to use any more of his time.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have a few minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker, and I desire to close the debate with those few minutes, when the gentleman is through with his time.

Mr. MORRELL. All right. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, we all know the tendencies of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] in the direction of economy. We saw them exhibited in his fruitless efforts to prevent this body from voting six or seven millions of dollars to be expended in the city of St. Louis in his own State in celebration of the Louisiana Purchase. We all know the tendencies of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] toward rigid economy. We saw them in his efforts to secure the appropriation of several millions more in the construction of Government buildings at Annapolis, in his district, than the economical chairman of the Appropiations Committee [Mr. CANNON] or the House itself thought necessary. We all know the economical tendencies of the chairman of the District Committee. We observed them in his fruitless efforts to induce us to advance some $10,000,000 out of the public Treasury a few days ago, which advance the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations said was needless.

But, laying aside all questions of the comparative merits of gentlemen in their struggle for economy, let us come down for one minute to the consideration of the propositions before the House.

Two years ago this House, by a majority of nearly 100, passed the existing law requiring the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to eliminate its grade crossings, erect a station at C street, and do certain other things. That bill appropriated $1,500,000 to that company in consideration of its doing these things. The economical gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], the economical chairman of the District Committee [Mr. BABCOCK], and the economical chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. CANNON] all voted for that bill; voted for it once, voted for it twice, appropriating $1,500,000 to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company in consideration of its bearing certain expenses and doing certain things. Now, this pending bill requires them to do more, according to the estimates of the Senate committee, of which the late Senator McMillan was chairman, and according to the unanimous report of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They say in that report, on page 13, "that in the case of the Baltimore and Ohio the total estimated cost is $250,000 or $300,000 greater than that of last year"—that is to say, this bill we are now discussing and which originated in the Senate in 1902, imposes $300,000 more of expense upon that company than was imposed upon it by the act of 1901, for which all of these economically inclined gentlemen voted.

Furthermore, this bill compels that railroad company to remove its freight station entirely outside of the city limits and locate it away out at Eckington, a proposition which, directly or indirectly, will cost that company at least a million of dollars. As I have already stated, all of these economical gentlemen voted for the act of 1901, which gave to this company $1,500,000. Now, this bill in those parts upon which both Senate and House have agreed puts these additional burdens upon the company, and the only amendment that is now undisposed of, so far as concerns that company, is that whereby they propose, in section 13, to amend the third paragraph of the eighth section of the act of 1901 by striking out, so that instead of reading $1,500,000 it shall read $1,000,000.

Now, take the case of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The act of 1901 required it to make vast expenditures for the purpose of eliminating all its grade crossings in this city. In consideration of its doing so it granted to the company additional land upon the Mall of the estimated value of $1,500,000. All of these economical gentlemen voted for that proposition in 1901.

This bill, upon which both Houses have already agreed except as to this particular amendment, proposes to take that land away from the company and also to impose upon it additional expenses. In their unanimous report addressed to the Senate committee, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia say:

> In the case of the Baltimore and Potomac, the extra estimated cost is nearly $3,600,000, and the bill provides that the company is to receive from the United States $1,500,000 for vacating the Mall.

In other words, the bill proposes to pay the company for the land which the Government takes from it, and having done that, imposes an additional $3,600,000 upon the company in order to enable the Government to carry out the improvements which it desires to make in the city of Washington. In brief, this bill says to the company over whose lines the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's cars enter this city, that it must surrender and vacate $1,500,000 worth of property, and must also do other things involving an additional expenditure of $3,600,000 for the purpose of beautifying this city. The bill upon which the Senate insists pays the company for the land taken.

The amendment which our economical friends are advocating proposes to pay for only two-thirds of the property. They voted in 1901 to convey this property to the company. They now desire to compel the company to give it back at two-thirds of what it cost the company, and in addition to that to compel the expenditure of $3,600,000 of additional money for the benefit of the city of Washington. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks, "Where are they required to do these things?" Why, this very bill, in that portion of it upon which both Houses have already agreed, requires it. Turn to line 1 on page 2, and you will find that the language is "authorized and required"—not authorized merely, but "authorized and required—to locate, construct, maintain, operate, etc." On page 7, beginning on line 4, it expressly declares that "the terminal station contemplated by this act shall cost not less than $4,000,000, and shall be monumental in character, and the plans therefor shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

Senator McMillan, and his committee estimated that the station, as contemplated, will cost $5,000,000. This act requires them to build it and do these other things requiring large expenditures of money.

Senator McMillan, in the report of his committee to the Senate, said:

During the Fifty-sixth Congress legislation was enacted enlarging the occupation of the railroad in the Mall. This action was taken only after years of effort to obtain the withdrawal of the road from public space, and because of the demand for the elimination of grade crossings and increased facilities for handling the rapidly growing traffic. In the adjustment then made the railroad received land in the Mall in lieu of the usual cash payment of one-half of the cost of track elevation.

The proposition now is that the United States shall buy, at a fair valuation, this land on which the railroad has been paying taxes for thirty years and that the railroad shall use the money so received as a portion of the expense of building a tunnel and making connections with the proposed union station.

This proposition does not come from the railroads. They are satisfied with their present situation.

Congress, however, is not satisfied. It desires that they shall build a beautiful union station for the adornment of the city; that in order to reach it instead of going over the surface of the ground they shall construct an extensive tunnel. Now, the use of this tunnel will not bring them an additional passenger or ton of freight. It is for the advantage of the city and not of the railroads. This is not a donation party. We are not giving anything to the railroad companies. We are taking from them. The question is, How much shall we take? What forced contribution shall we require of them?

I understand that they are willing to bear the increased burdens proposed by this bill, provided that otherwise they are left precisely as they were left by the legislation of 1901. The Senate bill gives them substantially just what this House, by a majority of nearly a hundred, determined upon in 1901. The Senate does not propose to give them a half million dollars apiece, but the amendment which the gentlemen advocate proposes to take from them a half million dollars apiece. By the Senate bill, without this amendment, they are left in precisely the same position in which the House put them in the legislation of two years ago, for which all of these economically inclined gentlemen voted. If it was right then, what has occurred to make that legislation wrong now, when we are proposing to put several million dollars of actual expenses upon these companies?

I have no interest, personal, professional, or financial, in any company named in this bill. I am glad to see them contribute all that they will toward the improvement and beautification of this city. If they are willing to make the total expenditures required by this bill, which all hands agree will amount to more than $12,000,000, I think the Government or the District of Columbia can afford to pay them for the property taken from them.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. I can not yield. I have but a few minutes. What has occurred to cause gentlemen who voted for the legislation of 1901 to oppose continuing the provisions as to these payments? Why, the gentleman from Illinois says that now these roads or corporations "flop together" better than they did then, in 1901. That is a proposition I challenge. They flopped together just as well then as they do now or ever will. But that is not the proposition before the House. The question is, What is right and just between the Government and these corporations, not on a proposition of their asking, but on our mandate to compel their expenditure of many millions of dollars; not for increasing their freight or passenger business, but in beautifying and improving the city of Washington? I hope the House will recede from the remaining amendments to the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLMSTED. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks permission that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I think I have the right to close, as I made the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is in charge of the bill, and has the floor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made a preferential motion, but that will not take from the gentleman from Wisconsin, in charge of the bill, the right to close debate.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I think I have five minutes remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. MORRELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] has stated very clearly and concisely the history of this whole terminal legislation, and it is not new. Two years ago we made provision for terminals for the two railroads. These provisions were satisfactory to both railroads. From that day to this they have never asked this House to have any change made in the legislation. The changes which have been made or which are provided for in the bill, the consideration of which we are about to conclude, are asked, not by either of the railways, but are asked by officials of the United States Government. The movement for the change from the provisions of the bills of two years ago was inaugurated by the then chairman of the District of Columbia Committee in another body, a distinguished gentleman, a man of broad, extensive business experience and of wise judgment, now deceased. That distinguished gentleman inaugurated a movement for the change of legislation in reference to the terminals.

And, Mr. Speaker, it was only after the most earnest, persistent arguments made by him on behalf of the Government that the railroads finally consented to the provisions of the Senate bill; consented upon his assurance that a million and a half dollars should be appropriated for each railroad, and that the influence of this distinguished gentleman should be used in bringing about that result. This is the question now. Shall we carry out here in the House the agreement made, not upon the application of either railroad or of both, but the application made on behalf of the Government by its official, by the chairman of a committee of one of the legislative bodies of the country, made to the railroads and accepted by them only upon the most earnest solicitation on behalf of the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is a mistaken notion in the House about amendment numbered 57. Amendment numbered 57 does not appropriate a cent. Amendment 57 does not appropriate a million and a half dollars for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. That money is already appropriated by the act of two years ago. The Senate provision in amendment 57, which we will incorporate in this bill, if we sustain the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to recede and concur, is a legislative enactment having nothing whatever to do with money. The provision inserted by the House is a provision which reduces that old appropriation from a million and a half to a million dollars. If we sustain the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede, we do not appropriate one cent more for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. We simply leave undisturbed the appropriation of a million and a half dollars that we made two years ago. That is all there is in that proposition.

Any gentleman can see it by reading the bill. The Senate provision, section 13, is legislation. It does not refer to money. The amendment incorporated by the House, that the House conferees are now insisting upon, is the one which reduces the amount which we have already appropriated for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. I think the House has had a mistaken notion in reference to that. My distinguished friend from Illinois asks in the most dramatic way and by repetition, "Will they accept it?" That, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me is an argument, if argument it may be called, beneath the dignity of the gentleman from Illinois. Might never has and never will make right. We have more than once under the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois and some other members forced claimants before this Government to accept a lesser amount than they believed was their just due. We have forced the members upon this floor to accept a lesser amount than they believed honestly due claimants. It is no argument to say that they will accept it if they are forced to accept it. I do not know whether the gentleman's statement is correct, but I am inclined to take with more than a little grain of allowance most of the statements made in regard to this proposition since more than two weeks ago one of the members of the conference committee on this bill stated to this House that the Senate conferees in five minutes would recede from their proposition if we would send them back with instructions. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as an amendment to my motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not an amendment to the gentleman's motion, it is a preferential motion.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the reading of his motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] is simply to recede on two amendments, Nos. 39 and 41, and, in regard to amendment 57, that the House recede from that part of it which has not been disposed of in conference.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, that is all there is open in the bill. Everything else has been agreed to. I ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, what difference there is, in effect, between the motion I make to insist and the gentleman's motion to recede? Is it not, in fact, the same motion; that is, an affirmative vote on one proposition is the same as a negative vote on the other?

The SPEAKER. Not in this case. We have here a Senate bill with House amendments. The bill has passed, and the amendments only are in controversy. The gentleman from Wisconsin

[Mr. BABCOCK] moves to insist on the amendments. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] moves to recede. If the House recedes from these amendments, that ends the matter; that disposes of the controversy. If the House does not recede, there may be several things that may be done under parliamentary law.

Mr. BABCOCK. If that is the status, Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer some questions propounded by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and also his colleague [Mr. OLMSTED] propounded this proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin going to occupy the balance of his time?

Mr. BABCOCK. But a very few moments. He propounded this proposition: "If a member of the House voted for this proposition in 1901, granting a million and a half dollars to each road, why have they changed their minds? What different conditions are there?" The different conditions, gentlemen, as I have stated over and over again on this floor, are that this proposition entails an additional burden of $1,600,000 on the Government and the District revenues. That is the difference.

Mr. PEARRE. Did not the gentleman from Wisconsin state in the debate on December 16, in response to a question by the gentleman from Missouri, that the actual increase to the District was only $600,000?

Mr. BABCOCK. No. I am speaking about the expenditure by the District and the General Government. The entire amount over and above the present law, the estimates that were agreed upon, is $1,600,000.

Mr. PEARRE. How much is the total increase of cost of the whole scheme?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am speaking about the cost to the District and the General Government.

Mr. PEARRE. I know; but what is the whole increased cost over 1901?

Mr. BABCOCK. The increased cost for elevation of the tracks——

Mr. PEARRE. I ask for the whole increased cost.

Mr. BABCOCK. Gentlemen, I am going to answer this question in my own way. The elevation is not half as high; it is not as long; but, gentlemen, are we going outside of the District of Columbia, into the State of Maryland, and pay for branch roads and spurs not in the District? Is that a part of the cost for elevation?

Mr. PEARRE. Is there any provision in the bill for that?

Mr. PALMER. How much more is it going to cost the railroads to go into the union depot scheme?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will answer as rapidly as I can.

Mr. PALMER. We have heard about the $1,600,000 that they are to pay for going to the Massachusetts avenue site; but I want to know how much the two railroads have to pay in the way of money if they go into this scheme.

Mr. BABCOCK. This bill will cost the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for track elevation $259,000 more than the present law; it will cost the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company $1,330,000 less than the present law.

Mr. PALMER. That is for track elevation. Now, go on and tell us about the rest.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is for track elevation. That relates to the elimination of grade crossings. It does not cover the building of new roads or the building of tunnels or depots. Who ever heard of a municipal government, or any other government, building depots and tunnels for any railway corporation?

Mr. PEARRE. May I ask the gentleman one question? Why is it necessary to build this tunnel and this $4,000,000 station?

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to answer another question—a question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN]. It has been shown to this House over and over again that this proposition is one that has been forced upon the roads. The gentleman from New York stated to the House that the railroad companies were urged into this project against their wishes; that it was a plan of the late Senator McMillan. He did not draw the proper distinction between the C street site and the Massachusetts avenue site. The C street site is the one which the railroad companies agreed to, and for which they filed their plans. That was the site that the House committee adopted and agreed to. The Massachusetts avenue site, in contradistinction to the C street site, was the Senate plan—not as against the present law, but only between the two sites. The House must not misunderstand as to the proposition which was urged upon these roads.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the gentleman to yield for a single question. Was I not correct in my statement that the first application for a change of law two years ago came from the Government rather than from the railroad?

Mr. BABCOCK. So far as the Massachusetts avenue site is concerned, that is correct. I found the plans for a union station at C street on file in the Commissioners' office, much to my surprise, after our committee had adopted the plan.

Mr. PEARRE. Was not that plan inaugurated by the Senator?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think not—not the C street site.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will occupy only a moment more. This is a matter of dollars and cents. It is a matter in which the District Committee has sought to do full justice to the roads; and I believe that the only way in which this matter can be properly and equitably adjusted is for the House to vote down the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how can we, or any of us, defend ourselves in voting to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company the sum of $500,000 when the facts and the figures show that by this legislation they save $1,330,000?

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on this proposition, because I believe that every man who votes upon it should make his record.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon the amendments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [A pause.] If not, they will be submitted in gross.

Mr. LATIMER. I should like to make a motion, as a substitute for the two motions already pending, that the House ask for a free conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order now. As the Chair understands, the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 101, answered "present" 10, not voting 83; as follows:

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MANN and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. MORRELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FIRST CUSTOMS CONGRESS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relative to the proceedings of the First Customs Congress of the American Republics, held at New York in January, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1903.

The message and accompanying documents were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

WILLIAM W. M'ALLISTER.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William W. McAllister, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOUSE BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House bills, similar to Senate bills that have passed the House, with the request that the House bills be ordered to lie on the table; which request, by unanimous consent, was agreed to:

H. R. 9676. A bill appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands;

H. R. 12913. A bill to authorize a resurvey of certain lands in the State of Wyoming, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14107. A bill adjusting certain conflicts respecting State school indemnity selections in lieu of school selections in abandoned military reservations;

H. R. 16760. A bill granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, in the Territory of Arizona;

H. R. 16882. A bill to establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts;

H. R. 15201. A bill to allot the lands of the Cherokee tribe of Indians in Indian Territory, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6539. A bill providing for the extension of the Loudoun Park National Cemetery, near Baltimore, Md.;

H. R. 16974. A bill permitting the building of a dam across the St. Croix River at or near the village of St. Croix Falls, Polk County, Wis.;

H. R. 17244. A bill to provide for the removal of persons accused of crime to and from the Philippine Islands for trial;

H. R. 17155. A bill to authorize the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River;

H. R. 1114. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin;

H. R. 17287. A bill removing fire limit on post-office grounds at Bridgeport, Conn.;

H. R. 17446. A bill authorizing the Secretary of State to cause the destruction of invoices filed in consular offices for more than five years;

H. J. Res. 203. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Arturo R. Calvo, of Costa Rica;

H. R. 16458. A bill to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies;"

H. R. 14375. A bill to authorize the President to appoint Brig. Gen. H. C. Maman to the grade of major-general in the United States Army on the retired list;

H. R. 948. A bill for the relief of William Dugdale, postmaster at Noroton Heights, Conn.; and

H. Res. 254. A resolution referring claim of R. H. Dunaway to Court of Claims.

INCREASE OF PENSION FOR LOSS OF LIMBS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States or are totally disabled in the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire calls up a conference report, which will be read by the Clerk.

The conference report and statement were read.

[For text of the conference report and statement see record of House proceedings of February 24.]

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I hardly think it necessary to make any statement. I think this matter is well understood by the House. The logic of it all is that the Senate has agreed to all of the amendments of the House with two exceptions, one increasing the pensions of all who lost limbs at any time up to date, whereas the House fixed the limit previous to 1886.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Most certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire think that in case this report is voted down there is any possible chance to get the Senate to agree to the amendments of the House increasing the pensions of soldiers drawing pensions under the act of 1890 for twelve months' service, and totally helpless, to $30 a month?

Mr. SULLOWAY. If the gentleman will pardon me—not the slightest. The conferees stood out for that until there was absolutely no hope that that could be done at this session of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The House conferees were all in favor of that amendment?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Unanimously; and stood for it for several weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. There was no hope of agreeing to the amendment by the Senate?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Not the slightest.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The House has adopted a liberal policy toward the old soldier. Many service pension bills have been introduced and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Some of them are based solely on service, and some have an age limit. The members of the committee generally favor a service pension and are of the opinion that a man's honorable service and his discharge should, as nearly as possible, be made his pension certificate. Of course it would require more than his discharge if the soldier draws his pension for injury received or disease incurred while in the line of service. His disabilities may be far in excess of any that could be compensated by a mere service pension. The expert accountant has been at work and attempts to show that the increase of cost would be so great that some members of the committee are not quite ready to subscribe to a service pension. I believe such a bill would pass the House if presented. For one, I am not scared off by this great claim of increased cost. I would much prefer to rely on the figures presented by our distinguished and worthy chairman of the committee. But whichever may prove correct, I am not ready to abandon a service pension. Let the cost be what it will, I am in favor of taking care of the men who fight the battles.

When Senate bill No. 4850, known as the limbless bill, was taken up for consideration, the Committee on Invalid Pensions amended the same by adding section 2, which provides for a pension of $30 a month for all honorably discharged soldiers with one year's service who are totally helpless and require the aid and attendance of another. The House promptly passed the Senate bill with this section added. The Senate refused to concur, and a conference was the result. The House conferees have insisted on this amendment; the Senate conferees declined to agree to the same. The House is now called on to say whether its conferees shall further insist or will the House recede. I desire to state that, personally, I am heartily in favor of the House amendment. I believe this great and generous Government is desirous of taking care of any and every honorably discharged soldier who is paralyzed, blind, or rendered wholly helpless for any cause, and that none of her citizens who risked their lives for the Republic when it was in great peril should ever be compelled to become an inmate of any public almshouse. Your conferees have labored with diligence, but have been unable to induce the Senate conferees to concur in the House amendment.

I do not think it worth while to insist longer, but think the House must recede or the bill increasing the limbless soldiers' pension must suffer defeat. This would be wrong and injurious to the men who gave for their country that which was next to their lives—a limb or limbs. These men are getting old, and have suffered and endured for forty years privations and pains that no language can describe. Shall we increase their pension or shall we further insist and thereby defeat their bill? As much as I dislike to, I am ready to recede and pass the Senate bill. To defeat the Senate bill would not in any way aid the class of soldiers we would provide for by the House amendment. My rule of action has always been to do as much good as I could and as little harm as possible. So in this instance I favor the passage of this bill, thereby doing justice to this one very worthy class and then keep up the agitation, hoping that in the course of time public sentiment will become so strong and outspoken as to move the dignified Senate to do its duty to all classes of soldiers, as all endured and suffered much that the Union of States might remain forever.

I desire again to call the attention of the House and the country to another evidence of the fact that this is a united country. Every bill that has been reported to the House by the Invalid Pensions Committee has met with approval and passed the House. There has been no division along party or sectional lines. The Representatives of the Southern States have been as liberal and generous to the Union soldiers as have been the Representatives of the Northern States. Where a Union soldier has become a resident of a Southern State, we find his Representative in Congress presenting his claims and urging a bill for his relief as persistently and with as much good will and enthusiasm as any of the Representatives from the Northern States. The new South and the new North stand as one man for everything and every man who wrought for the great American Republic.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a question.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What is the reason why the Senate will not allow the House provision granting $30 a month to soldiers unable to take care of themselves or requiring the constant attendance of another to remain in the bill?

Mr. SULLOWAY. The Senate conferees took the position that it does not follow necessarily that their disabilities were contracted in the service, and they had some information or figures which they presented, which I think were tremendously exaggerated as to the burden it would impose upon the Government, and these were the arguments or reasons that were presented, and finally they said that they would not recommend the amendment to their body under any conditions during this session of Congress. I presume I ought not to say anything further on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The question was taken, and the report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriations for the support of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement only may be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement only be read. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before consent is given, may I ask the gentleman if that is a unanimous report?

Mr. HULL. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All the conferees have signed it?

Mr. HULL. All the conferees have signed it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I do not object.

The SPEAKER. It is so ordered.

[For conference report and statement, see page 2590.]

Mr. HULL and Mr. SULZER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL. Does the gentleman desire any time to discuss it?

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa if that provision in the bill regarding retirement has been eliminated? From the reading of the report I believe it has.

Mr. HULL. The amendment of the Senate in regard to retirement has been eliminated by the Senate receding from their amendment.

Mr. SULZER. And there is no provision now in the bill regarding retirement?

Mr. HULL. Not at all.

Mr. SULZER. Then I wish to say that I regret very much that provision has been left out. I was in favor of it and thought it was practically agreed to. If I had been on the conference committee I would not have consented to striking that provision out. It should be in, and I would have insisted on keeping it in. But it is too late now, I regret to say, to do anything. Some other time I shall do what ought to be done in this matter.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if there is no other question, I will ask for a vote on the report.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire a minute or two. As I understand it, the item for the purchase of the Heitman manuscript has been agreed to in the conference?

Mr. HULL. It has not. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that on all the amendments where a separate vote was demanded the conferees accepted the action of the House as in the nature of an instruction, while it was not a positive instruction. And while all the conferees were agreed, after an examination of the matter, that the Heitman amendment should be incorporated in the bill, out of deference to the House, and there being no instruction in regard to the matter, it was decided to report it back disagreed to, with the understanding that a motion was to be made to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. HULL. Well, that matter is not up now. If the gentleman wants it now I will gladly yield; but the question is upon the adoption of the report, and the next will be on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. THAYER. For the purpose of asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THAYER. What provision is there in the bill now for the purchase of Balls Bluff battlefield? Is it in the bill?

Mr. HULL. It is not. The Senate receded from their amendment; so that is eliminated from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman from Virginia, the representative of the minority upon the conference, is not here. I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, now to move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 3 and agree to the same, and I will ask the Clerk to read amendment No. 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

(3) To enable the Secretary of War to purchase from Francis B. Heitman, the compiler thereof, the manuscript of the Historical Register of the United States Army, compiled from the official records of the War Department from 1789 to the date of the passage of this act, $3,000, to be immediately available; and for printing an edition of 6,000 copies of said register by the Public Printer, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the War Department, and from the copies allotted to the War Department each Government depository shall be supplied with one copy, $12,000.

Mr. HULL. I will now ask the Clerk to read also the following letter from the Secretary of War, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1903.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Upon a suggestion that I should advise your committee whether or not I am in favor of having the "amendment for the purchase and printing of the Heitman Army Register" retained in the Army appropriation bill, I have the honor to say that this provision was referred to me by the Senate Military Committee last month for my recommendation, and was returned to the committee with a statement that I concurred in the report of the Adjutant-General thereon, recommending favorable action.

The chiefs of the several War Department bureaus and other prominent officers of the Army, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Auditor for the War Department, and other public officials, whose opinions as to the value of a publication of this sort are entitled to the greatest consideration, and who will have occasion to use it constantly if it be issued, have strongly expressed themselves in favor of the proposed legislation, and I do not hesitate to accept their views in the matter.

Very respectfully,
ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HULL. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it is too late to make any change in the wording of the amendment. But if it should be agreed to, I notice that it provides for the publication of 3,000 copies for the use of the War Department, out of which the public depositories shall receive one each. I wish to call attention to the law which provides that wherever a public document is printed, there goes with the order the usual number, which means one for each member of Congress, one for each executive office, and one for each public depository. So, under this amendment the public depositories will receive two copies of this volume if it is ordered printed. I ask if there is any way of escaping that now?

Mr. HULL. I should say we had better adopt it or reject it as a whole. I do not think that ought to be a sufficient objection to it. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the two Houses have so nearly agreed, the only point of difference being the appropriation to purchase Mr. Heitman's manuscript and publication of the list of the officers of the Army, that I am not disposed to make any captious opposition. I will content myself with saying that I believe it is an unnecessary expenditure, and that it is waste and extravagance. Private publishers have printed such books heretofore, and I know of no reason for believing that private publishers will not print such books hereafter. These books are to be printed at the public expense for gratuitous distribution. The compilation was made by a clerical official in the War Department, and the demand for it, which has caused this legislation, was skillfully created. I think the item ought not to pass, but I shall make no further objection to it.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in this whatever. I know nothing about it except what has come to me from the War Department. I know that the conferees were willing to incorporate it into the report and let it all go together, and I believe from the evidence that we have had submitted to us it will be one of the valuable publications as a book of reference only. Now, if there is no further debate desired, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to recede and concur in this amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ASSET CURRENCY.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16228.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill 16228, the national-bank bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BARTLETT) there were—ayes 53, noes 29.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clear that there is no quorum present. The officers will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll; those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey will vote "aye;" those opposed will vote "no;" and those present not wishing to vote will say "present." The officers will bring in the absentees.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 135, nays 80, answering "present" 28, not voting 108; as follows:

Mr. LACEY with Mr. SHAFROTH.

Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

Mr. LOVERING with Mr. PIERCE.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

A quorum being present, the Doorkeeper was directed by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ADAMS) to open the doors.

The House, in pursuance of the vote just taken, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. LAWRENCE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16228) providing for the issue and circulation of national-bank notes.

Mr. PUGSLEY obtained the floor and said: I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I represent, in part, a peculiarly wage-earning community, the densest hive of human industry on the face of the earth—Pittsburg, Allegheny County, Pa.—the center of the greatest population in the United States outside of New York and Philadelphia, and what is now acknowledged to be the greatest manufacturing section of the world. Of course it will be conceded that it requires money, and large amounts of it, to carry on this manufacturing, and as an evidence of its existence there I will state that the capital, surplus, and deposits of the banks—national, State, and savings—of this one county exceed the combined capital, surplus, and deposits of the banks of eight Southern States—viz, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, and North and South Carolina—represented in this Congress by 57 Members.

Currency is only a tool, an implement, for use in the hands of the business men of the country. Common sense suggests that the people who need to work in this country should have all the tools or implements that they need to work with, whether it be axes, shovels, hoes, hammers, steam engines, cars, or currency. The greatest labor-saving instrument in use in the country to-day is the currency, which is supplemented and enlarged many times over by the use of bank checks, but at the bottom of all the tremendous use of credits, which are made by means of bank checks, must be a currency sufficient in volume and flexibility to redeem those checks in the actual legal tender of the country whenever and wherever there may be any call or demand therefor. It is well known that, in round numbers, about 95 per cent of the business of the country is done by means of bank checks and other instruments of credit which are not legal tender. This medium is all very well for the larger commercial transactions, but in many localities, and in none more than my own, there is a strong demand and a continuous need for the actual circulating medium of the country, which must pass from hand to hand and everywhere accepted for the purchase of commodities and the payment of debts.

In the extensive manufacturing industries of my section of the country we have a single establishment employing 25,000 men, and scores whose employees run into the thousands. These men, as a rule, are paid every two weeks, and must be, or at least in accordance with established customs are, paid in cash—the actual coin and paper money of the country. More currency per capita is therefore required there than in any other section. The consequent demand for currency is tremendous, and it must be met or the industries will suffer. Oftentimes the strain upon the banks to meet and supply this demand is extreme. Why should this be? There is no reason at all why, with a properly regulated currency, such as this bill would give us, we should not have a most ample supply of the circulating medium whose use is so essential.

For months the country has known of the congestion of freights and the consequent loss and damage to the business interests from the shortage of cars to move the coal, iron, steel, and glass products. It was most seriously felt in Pittsburg, whose railroad tonnage is, as I have already stated on the floor of this House, greater than that of any other city in the world, being in excess of the combined railroad tonnage of New York and Chicago. Five thousand loaded railroad cars enter and depart daily, and, including the Connellsville coke region, over 2,000,000 railroad cars are loaded there annually.

The inconvenience from the shortage of currency has been, and is liable to continue to be, at times almost equally as serious as the car shortage. Would anyone for a moment vote to keep upon our statute books a law which would limit the number of cars the railroad companies should be allowed to furnish for the use of the public? Why, then, should the banks of the country, which, in the form of currency, furnish to the business interests of the country a feature as necessary as is transportation, be hampered with a limit in the amount which they can put forth. Under wise and proper restriction they should be as free to furnish currency when needed as the railroads are to furnish cars. In both cases the law of supply and demand ought to have free play. There should be no restriction placed upon the energies of our business men, nor should they be hampered for want of an ample supply of this the most useful adjunct of modern business—a sound, safe, flexible currency. By the passage of this bill we will be taking a long step in that direction. Through it we may hope to be put on a par in this respect with the other civilized countries of the world.

I have mailed copies of this bill to most of the bankers and many of the leading manufacturers and business men of the country, requesting their views upon this measure. Replies have been almost invariably favorable, a few only making criticism upon some minor feature of the bill.

I have endeavored briefly to present a few reasons from the standpoint of a business man why I favor this bill, and I trust the average good common sense of the members of this Congress will lead them to agree in placing this measure upon our statute books.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. For two days I have assiduously sought an opportunity to make a funeral oration on the now defunct "Fowler bill." I have gone to the members of the committee and asked for time. I have appealed to the Chair. No time has been allotted me; and now I desire to know whether, in the progress of this debate, I may have an opportunity to offer a few observations on the demise of the celebrated "Fowler bill."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentlemen on that side of the House, in reply to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama, that if they would stop filibustering on that side of the House——

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I will not be lectured on good manners by the gentleman from Connecticut, who knows nothing about good manners.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair will answer the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to answer——

Mr. BARTLETT. But, Mr. Chairman, I hope before the Chair answers it that he will permit me to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the House also. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KLUTTZ. "Where are we at?"

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] if he did not demand the regular order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair desires at this time to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair will state that no arrangement with reference to division of time has been made pending this debate, that the Chair does not recall that the gentleman from Alabama has ever arisen and addressed the Chair indicating an intention or a desire to speak on the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Then I shall claim that privilege now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that when the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House the gentleman from New York [Mr. PUGSLEY] was recognized in his own right, which gives him the privilege of proceeding for one hour. He now has the floor.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, I just wanted to talk a little about a dead thing. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair having answered the question, the gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish I had longer time, not to talk about this particular bill, for that is already dead, and we ought not to say anything but good of the dead; but I would like to point out some of the shortcomings of the Republican party in the matter of currency legislation. Now, you have been in power for six years, and session after session you have confessed your incompetency to deal with the currency question. You have brought forward, after six years of assiduous labor, the Fowler bill, which has been condemned by bankers, which has not met the approval of the business interests of the country, and is now spit upon by the Republican membership in this House, and awaits only a few hours to receive some sort of decent form of interment.

You brought forward this bill which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] undertook in a very labored argument to explain, but he has convinced nobody, it seems, of its merits. He brought forward five or six diagrams with zigzag marks on them looking like Mount Pelee in eruption. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] When we heard that long and extensive speech of his, we thought that so far as touching the financial question was concerned we might as well have witnessed the eruption of Mount Pelee. I was told that the guides around the Capitol a few days ago, in showing the curiosities, came upon these diagrams. The visitors naturally enough said, "What are these curious things?" The guides said, "This is Mr. FOWLER'S illustration of the eruption of Mount Pelee." [Laughter.]

Now this is the Fowler bill. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRIGGS rose.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, do ask for more time, I beg of you. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama may be extended for twenty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

Mr. CLAYTON. Ten minutes more will do.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. I object.

Mr. CLAYTON. Oh, I won't hurt that dead thing of yours. Let me have some time.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think you could hurt anybody or anything.

Mr. CLAYTON. Maybe I could not. I certainly could not hurt a thing as dead as you and your bill are. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The House, just out of respect to you, let you make that oration the other day.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my request that the time of the gentleman may be extended for ten minutes be put.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's request has been put and objection was made.

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, let me print something about his dead bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PUGSLEY] is recognized.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman from Alabama ten minutes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Well, you see I am going to talk about your dead thing, anyhow. Mr. Chairman, this Fowler bill will not hand the name of its author down to posterity, because the child, in order to transmit the name, must be at its birth at least a breathing child.

This Fowler bill has provision for a very great inflation of the currency. It will stimulate the organization of other banks, and will probably increase our currency more than its author, Mr. FOWLER, has estimated. But it does not meet the demand of the country for emergency currency in times of financial stringency, when panics are threatened or panics are upon us. Now, let us consider a few facts pertinent to this proposed legislation.

The ratio between deposits and currency in bank has been about 10 to 1 for a long period of time (see Comptroller's reports). You will observe, page 2, the amount held by banks, according to his figures July 16, 1902, was $848,000,000, and the deposits July 1, 1902, were $9,158,000,000, or more than 10 to 1 as the ratio.

The difficulty in our finance is that money is hoarded and withdrawn from circulation in periodic times of panic. This frightens the banks, and they press their weakest borrowers and force their assets on a ruinous market. The spirit of credit which is the soul of business activity is profoundly affected and business suffers more or less.

Mr. Fowler states that the exchanges in 1902 reached $118,000,000,000. This is only external checks, and does not include the internal checks of the reporting banks or either the internal or external checks of the banks not in the clearing-house list. The actual checks drawn, which constitute an ephemeral currency would probably amount to a grand total of $300,000,000,000, or about $1,000,000,000 per diem of the working days of the year. The probable life of a check is between two and three days, so that we would probably have in actual existence on an average day of 1902 about $2,000,000,000 of ephemeral currency, consisting of checks, drafts, acceptances, bills of lading, etc., which are received as money and serve the purposes of commerce as well as money. The Comptroller's reports show that during the panics of 1873, of 1884, of 1893 the clearings were suddenly contracted 50 per cent, which is a violent shrinking of this ephemeral currency, and that the disastrous results of such a situation are not to be wondered at.

The value of the bill I suggest consists in the fact, first, that the timid depositors of the country could not, by withdrawing the currency from the banks for hoarding, thereby create mischief, because a quick method of replacing such withdrawals is here provided. (The Comptroller's reports for 1893 showed that over 18 per cent of the deposits were withdrawn from the national banks between March and October of 1893, the currency being forced back into bank by pressure on the weakest class of borrowers.) But, second, the chief value of the bill I propose consists in the fact that the business world, knowing that the Treasury would afford money upon proper security, and thus that a means was provided for restoring currency withdrawn for hoarding, the timidity which the depositors now feel would be utterly abated and no insensate fear would seize the depositors. This has been demonstrated by the experience of the Bank of England, where panics have invariably been instantly stopped when a ministerial permit has been given the Bank of England to issue £5 notes against other securities than gold.

The German method is exactly the one in principle proposed by the bill introduced by me, the German law providing that the Imperial Bank of Germany may issue legal-tender notes against other securities than gold (the bills receivable signed by two established householders), under a penalty of an interest tax higher than the normal rate. The New York Clearing House in default of a better method use their joint credit to issue clearing-house certificates, which serves the function of money and releases to them large amounts of currency in times of panic. They also use the device of issuing certified checks to depositors in suitable cases. Such devices ought not to be permitted, being in violation of law or of the right of the depositor, who may demand currency and get a certified check.

The associated banks of New York have the power under present conditions and periodic panics to use their great wealth to speculate off of the violent fluctuations in the purchasing power of money and speculate on the misfortunes of the weaker members of the great financial family conducting the business affairs of this country.

The bill proposed by me will give commercial stability to this country and enable the country to pursue in safety its magnificent structure established on the credit system by the use of checks and drafts which renders intensely fluent the currency we have. You will observe from the estimate on the volume of checks and drafts that every dollar in the banks is probably used once every day.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have introduced into this House, although I may say that I am not a financier, and I do not think the author of the Fowler bill can justly assert that he is—I have introduced into this House the bill referred to and which some friends have been kind enough to say would provide an emergency currency.

I think it will meet some of the suggestions of the Secretary of the Treasury. Here is what he says in his last report:

I am not prepared at this time to recommend branch banks. Recent events confirm a previous opinion that the peculiar conditions of this country would not be conserved by such a policy.

* * * * * * *

I think a far better course, for the present at least, would be to provide an elastic currency, available in every banking community and sufficient for the needs of that locality. This, I think, can be accomplished either in the way I have intimated or by several other methods.

The Department recommends no one plan to the exclusion of all others. It is the province of the Department to point out the weak places, that the Congress may strengthen them; to suggest possible, if not imminent, dangers, that the Congress may provide against them; but ultimate responsibility does not lie with the Department.

At present the purchase of outstanding Government bonds for the credit of the sinking fund affords the only method of returning surplus public revenues to the channels of trade after they have been once covered into the Treasury. The Department is authorized to deposit current internal-revenue and other receipts, except customs, with national banks upon satisfactory security, but this method affords very tardy relief in case of monetary stringency. On the other hand, the purchase of bonds invites a contraction of national-bank circulation for the purpose of disposing of the bonds pledged for its security at the advanced price which usually prevails whenever the Government becomes a purchaser. Thus the object sought to be attained is counteracted. If authority were granted to make deposits without security after special examination and at such rates of interest as the Secretary of the Treasury might determine, quite an element of elasticity would be provided whenever a surplus of revenues existed. By advancing or lowering the rate of interest an equilibrium could be maintained throughout the country, and the interest charge would more than cover any loss.

But if it should be deemed unwise to permit the loaning of public funds without specific security, it certainly would be well to authorize deposits direct from the Treasury, and, as now, upon satisfactory security. If such authority had existed during the last few months, the something more than $20,000,000 which was paid to the owners of Government bonds would have been deposited in a large number of reserve cities throughout the country, and the relief afforded would have been equally permanent and more widely appreciated.

This bill that I have introduced provides for an emergency fund, the bills to be printed now to be kept by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that those bills shall be issued to the holder of any United States bonds upon his application for that money. Upon releasing the interest on his bonds to the Government he gets the par value of his money in legal-tender Treasury notes. As the law now is he can go through the indirect method of going to a national bank—as I happen to know was done in the panic of 1893–94, where the bank was friendly—he can go to that bank, put up the bonds and have the Treasury issue national-bank bills and the bank turn them over to him. The difference between this proposition and the national-bank proposition is that here the Government pays to the concern that gets the money no interest, whereas the perpetuation of this national banking system and the Fowler bill proposition contemplate that the Government shall surrender this governmental function of issuing money to a corporation on bonds, and at the same time pay them the interest on the bonds. This proposition is to allow the bondholder to have the money issued directly to him, and he forfeits the interest on his bonds.

Now, there are in round numbers $300,000,000 of bonds held by national banks as a basis of their circulation. There are in round numbers $600,000,000 of outstanding interest-bearing United States bonds not held by national banks and which are not used as the basis of currency. In time of panic, if this proposition were adopted, no doubt these bonds would uncover themselves and be brought forward and be used as a basis of an emergency fund and prevent a panic.

Here is the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury as to outstanding bonds:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 10, 1903.

Hon. HENRY D. CLAYTON,
House of Representatives:

Telegram received. Interest-bearing United States bonds outstanding to date, nine hundred and fourteen million five hundred and forty-one thousand four hundred and thirty; bonds on which interest has ceased, one million two hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and ten; bonds held to secure national-bank notes, three hundred and forty-one million nine hundred and eighty-three thousand five hundred and seventy.

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

Another vice of the Fowler bill is this: You take the ratio between deposits and the currency in banks and it has been about 10 to 1 for a long period of time. You will find that out from the Comptroller's report. You will observe on page 2 the amount held by the banks, according to the figures July 16, 1902, to be $848,000,000, and the deposits July 1, 1902, to be $9,158,000,000, or more than 10 to 1. Your Fowler bill would pile up a currency, but it does not lessen the chasm between deposits and money held by the banks. And in every financial panic that is where the trouble comes in. Under the Fowler bill you propose to issue more money, but you do not lessen the ratio between deposits and bank holdings. So, then, in a panic how would the Fowler bill, with all of its inflations, help the country? How would it help to cure this defect?

I ask leave of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. Under this leave bill H. R. 17494 is printed:

A bill (H. R. 17494) to provide an emergency circulation fund, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have printed and to keep on hand United States Treasury notes under a special account to be called the "emergency circulation fund." Such notes shall be full legal tender. Any citizen of the United States shall have the right to deposit United States bonds, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and receive from such fund 100 per cent of the face value of such bonds in United States Treasury notes, and shall have the right at any time within twelve months to redeem such bonds by repaying in United States Treasury notes the amount so received by him on account of such bonds, with interest at the rate borne by the bond on such amount. Failure to so redeem such bonds within the limit of twelve months shall operate as a forfeiture of such bonds to the United States, and such bonds shall be sold to the highest bidder in the open market, and the balance, after the payment of the principal of the amount advanced, the interest on the same, and the expenses, shall be paid to the former owner of such bonds. Any moneys received from such sale may be exchanged with other moneys in the Treasury, so that this fund shall consist alone of Treasury notes. The principal of all sums so advanced when repaid shall be returned to the "emergency circulation fund," and all interest upon such sums shall be passed to the credit of the Treasury under miscellaneous receipts.

The actual amount of notes held in the "emergency circulation fund" shall never be less than $50,000,000 in excess of any outstanding advances. Said fund shall neither be increased nor diminished except in the manner provided.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is with some hesitation that I take up for discussion a subject so broad and intricate as that of currency reform, and particularly after it has already been so ably discussed upon the floor of this House.

A sound and stable currency is the lifeblood of a nation's commerce and prosperity, and any legislation making radical changes in our currency system is of vital importance not only to banking, financial, and commercial interests, but to the people of the whole country.

In discussing this measure, however, I am sustained and comforted by the words of the Psalmist: "Surely He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler" [laughter and applause], or, as the sweet singer of Israel said in enlarging upon the thought: "Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler, the snare is broken and we are escaped." [Laughter.] It may have been that the spirit of prophecy, so marvelous in the days of that sweet singer, looking with prophetic vision into the twentieth century and beholding the evils threatening a great and good people, uttered the words of hope and promise which I have just quoted. That deliverance from the meshes of this measure will be vouchsafed us I am assured.

The distinguished chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of this House has given much thought and conscientious, if not laborious, effort to the preparation of the bills which he has presented dealing with the currency system of the country, and it gives me great pleasure to say that I believe he has rendered a patriotic service in bringing these great problems to the attention of this House and the people of the entire country. I most heartily commend the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey for the earnest effort he has made in the interests of currency reform. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.] I have observed that his bill has been indorsed by certain of the press of the country as being one filled with golden promise even though it is a paper measure. I wish I might be as sanguine of the marvelous results of its enactment into law as my worthy friend from New Jersey seems to be.

I am reminded by this proposed legislation, Mr. Chairman, and its anticipated benefits, of an incident of the memorable campaign of 1896. A well-known and eloquent lawyer at a political meeting in my native town was painting in glowing colors the desirability of the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1, and the plenitude of money under these conditions, when one of his hearers, an impecunious and dissipated character of the town, called out: "Will they bring it to us, or will we have to go after it?" [Laughter.] Some men are of such sanguine temperament that if you show them an egg the air is suddenly filled with feathers. [Laughter.]

In all legislation making radical changes in our currency system we should rather err on the side of conservatism than enact some measure which may be only speculatively good. We are at present enjoying a fair measure of prosperity in spite of the endeavor of coal dealers and certain combinations of capital controlling the necessities of life to abrogate all the prosperity to themselves, and in spite of a supposed scarcity of the circulating medium of the country. As a matter of fact, however, we have with few exceptions more currency in circulation than ever before in our country's history, more per capita than any other country in the world if we exclude, possibly, France. I therefore very much question the necessity for a larger supply of a permanent circulating medium.

The American people at certain times are subject to a disease, real or imagined, which may be called "lack of money." It is contagious, spreads rapidly, and we all have it—not the money, but the disease. [Laughter.]. A supplementary currency that would meet the demands in certain seasons of the year, as during the moving of the crops, and in times of panic, would, I believe, prove a panacea and answer all requirements if ingrafted upon our present system. But such a supplementary currency should be of a character that it would contract naturally when the occasion which called it into being ceased to exist. The last annual report of the Treasury Department showed that the unprecedented expansion which has been going on since 1897 continued during the past year, nearly $60,000,000 having been added to the currency during the month of October. It is interesting to note that the money in circulation during the past five years has increased over $600,000,000, or nearly 40 per cent in that period, and under such conditions it would seem there is no necessity for a large permanent increase in the country's circulating medium. And yet it might be advisable to test a certain amount of asset currency, provided it shall be issued under such restrictions that it can not possibly become a primary issue in our financial system. For I fully understand, Mr. Chairman, that we do not want to perpetuate the public debt in order to supply a basis for a bond-secured circulation.

I have no doubt that a supplementary currency based upon assets might be made perfectly secure if it was thoroughly guarded in its issue with provisions for its prompt redemption, sufficiently taxed to supply a guaranty fund, and also made secure by a proper reserve of lawful money against outstanding circulation. The American people may be ready to permit such a currency under the conditions I have mentioned, but I do not believe they are ready, particularly at the height of a speculative boom, to allow banks to issue paper money at their discretion.

There has been much criticism of our currency system, but whatever there is of criticism our currency is sound beyond question and good beyond peradventure. I am not blind, Mr. Chairman, to its faults, but the bill now before us will not, in my opinion, better existing conditions. Our present system has for forty years met the requirements of the country, with rare exception. What would have been the effect and the loss entailed if we had had an asset currency pure and simple, rather than one secured by Government bonds, is an unsettled problem. I know that certain figures have been given based upon the losses made through the present currency system, but if no bonds had been pledged and banking institutions could have been established all over the country to issue currency upon assets only, the losses would undoubtedly have been far greater than under the present system.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman has introduced a bill himself providing for 30 per cent of asset currency. The Fowler bill provides for 25 per cent. Is there any greater danger in 25 per cent than in 30 per cent: and will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PUGSLEY] kindly tell the House how he has provided for a contraction of his assets under the terms of his bill?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the bill I have introduced I will say that I provide for 20 per cent of currency only at a slightly higher rate of taxation than is provided in this bill, and on the other 10 per cent a tax of 3 per cent.

Mr. HILL. Now, then, that is the reason I asked the question, to have the gentleman make that answer. Will the gentleman explain to the House how a tax on currency causes a contraction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is a very evident proposition. If you put a heavy tax on the circulation, it will certainly return when the rate of money depreciates.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman explain how it is that a tax on circulation has any effect upon its return when the bank which issues the circulation, and not the people who hold it, pays the tax? The people who have the circulation in use are not the persons who pay the tax. Will the gentleman please explain how it is that a contraction will be produced by a tax on the circulation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that, if I understand the human nature of bankers, I do not care at what rate they get their circulation; they are going to get in the market just all that is possible to get, and it makes no difference whether that circulation costs them one-half of 1 per cent, or 1 per cent, or 3 per cent. It is simply a matter of supply and demand that fixes the rate.

Mr. HILL. Certainly. But the gentleman does not answer my question. He is the president of a bank.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further. We had this all thrashed over in our discussion a few days ago, and I do not think it is essential either for the edification or the instruction of this House that we should go again over these questions.

It has been stated the system is a very expensive one, but I believe that it is far better to have an expensive currency than to have one of doubtful quality, for the great essential of any currency is quality rather than quantity. Great Britain has an expensive system, but the quality and stability of her currency is unquestioned, and the pound sterling is the world's standard of value. Every merchant, American, Spanish, or whatever nationality, in Australia, the Philippine Islands, or in any other part of the world, knows that the value of the pound sterling will be maintained in Great Britain under all circumstances and that the sum of money he puts there in January he will be able to get, as one has said, at the same value in the December of eternity, if he calls for it then. I want to see the world's standard the American dollar and our currency system surpassing that of any other nation on the face of the globe, but only by the most conservative legislation can this be accomplished.

It should be remembered that money is the exponent or representative of value in trade and exchanges, and fully meeting the demands these make upon it, the desirability of an abundance of currency ceases. For one does not need three horses to draw the plow when one will do; and the smallest amount of money which will transact the largest amount of business is a very near approach to a perfect ideal in business conditions. We should, therefore, rather guard the stability of the currency than to seek its undue expansion.

I wish to read here an extract from an article by an English writer in reference to this very question:

> By a notable coincidence the foreign trade of the United States in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, amounted to hardly as much as the money in circulation. What more striking proof could there be of an ample, not to say prodigal, supply of circulating medium? The exports for the year in question were nearly $1,382,000,000 and the imports $903,000,000, making together $2,285,000,000—only $51,000,000 less than the volume of currency available for turning them over. If our own stock of money were put on an equally lavish footing it would have to be increased three or four fold. We should be smothered in money and not know what to do with it. * * * The bare facts only are mentioned, in order to show that the United States can not possibly be suffering from a scarcity of currency in the ordinary meaning of the term.

The bill before us provides that any national bank having notes outstanding in excess of 75 per cent of its paid-up capital, to secure the payment of which United States bonds have been deposited, may, upon the deposit of lawful money for the redemption of such excess, take out for circulation the notes provided for in this bill. It does not make provision that a certain amount of bonds shall be deposited for circulation, with the exception that in case a bank holds 100 per cent of bond-secured currency it may be reduced to 75 per cent of its capital without being brought under the statute limiting the amount of notes that may be retired in any one calendar month to $3,000,000.

The bill is not, to my mind, sufficiently clear as to the power of the bank to issue this 25 per cent of asset currency which has not on deposit 75 per cent of the bank's capital in Government bonds. I presume the intent of the bill is to allow all national banks holding the minimum of bonds required under the present law to issue such asset currency, but if such is the meaning of the bill, it allows the large banks, which are only required by the present law to hold $50,000 of bonds, to issue 25 per cent of the asset currency, while the smaller banks throughout the country must hold 25 per cent of their capital in Government bonds before they can come under the national banking system or under the provisions of this bill. It will be seen at once that a bank having five million (or ten or twenty-five million) of capital, or whatever the capital may be in excess of $150,000, may issue this asset currency with a deposit of only $50,000 bonds with the United States Treasury, which seems to be a very unjust discrimination among the banks of the country. You can readily understand that a bank with $25,000,000 of capital, having $50,000 of bonds on deposit in the Treasury, can issue over $6,000,000 of asset currency, and other banks of less capital in like proportion.

There is a provision also that the same reserve should be held against this circulation as is now held against deposits. I believe that the reserve against circulation should be uniform all over the country, and that some banks should not be required to hold 25 per cent reserve while others are required to hold only 6, and that 10 per cent or 15 per cent would be ample in addition to the amount held in the guaranty or reserve fund.

I question whether a better system of redemption can be evolved than the one now in use. I have been informed by bankers throughout the country that at least 60 per cent of the currency issued by their banks is redeemed during the year. It would seem from this fact that the redemption system works admirably, and, as some bankers of years of experience have said to me, is far superior to the old Suffolk system.

The bill under discussion, however, provides that the country shall be divided into districts, that in each district there shall be a city of redemption, and that notes going beyond the district of their issue shall be accepted by banks at par, but shall be returned to their proper district by the banks receiving them and not paid out by those banks.

The American people have become so accustomed to a currency good in any part of the United States that I do not believe they will willingly depart from such a currency and adopt any plan or system which will result in a circulation that may be at a discount outside of its own district, and which will lead to an examination by the banks of every bill that passes through their hands. To-day a national-bank bill passes readily in any part of the United States. We do not even look to see whether it was issued in California, New York, Maine, or Texas. The bank issuing it may have failed, but still the bill passes unquestioned, being guaranteed by the Government.

It may be said the bill provides that this currency shall be received at par by every bank, but if it is essential that this currency shall be forwarded from the bank receiving it to another section of the country and express charges paid upon it, I can readily see that in some way the banking institutions receiving it would take care that they were not at a loss in returning it to the bank of issue. And although a charge might not be made directly upon it, a plan would be evolved whereby the bankers would avoid any loss through exchanges, unless human nature is very different from what I believe it to be among bankers.

Further, I am quite sure that the bankers of the country, or at least a majority of them, will object to any system which will necessitate the sorting out of bills belonging to another district and forwarding them rather than paying them out, if they so desire, over their own counter. And I know that the American people will not willingly leave a system which has meant that every bill in any part of the United States is current in every other part.

In its broadest sense this is a national question. It affects the relation of the banks to the public, and this relation is a greater consequence than the banks' relations can possibly be to each other or to the Treasury. The banks are the servants of the people; not the masters. The keen interest the people have taken in currency reform and in the issue of asset currency reveals their appreciation of this fact. The desire for a more elastic currency has aroused public sentiment, as there is always a fear in mercantile communities and among the people of there not being enough money to go around.

As a monetary proposition there is no proof whatever that the United States has an insufficiency of currency. In fact, official statistics show quite the contrary. It is hardly to be conceived that 80,000,000 people shall have real use for $2,400,000,000 of circulating medium. If there should be a demand for an additional circulation, it is only at exceptional seasons of the year, as at the moving of the crops. These emergencies are brief, recur annually, and may always be provided for by proper legislation.

An English writer, grasping the situation in this country, aptly says:

> What chiefly concerns the American public is that so much of their currency should be tied up by legal enactments of various kinds, all more or less questionable in policy. Currency so tied up is not money at all for business purposes. The country might be almost as well off without it. Perhaps the American idea of creating money simply to lock up as bank reserves was borrowed from the railway stations in Germany, where there must be always one cab on the ranks, for the last cab to go out without a permit from the imperial chancellor would, we presume, be lezé majesty! So, for a national bank to let its reserve fall below the sacred 25 per cent is almost an act of bankruptcy. It brings down the Government examiner in a decidedly dangerous humor.

I believe that the large fund of gold and silver in the country, with the Government issuing circulating notes to national banks on deposited bonds and permitting a certain amount of supplementary circulation, would meet all the requirements for an elastic currency. I believe if further elasticity is needed it could be accomplished by enlarging the amount of circulating notes of national banks that might be surrendered in any one month from three to six or even ten millions per month, or by exempting from the limitation of the law all currency issued in excess of 50 per cent of capital for which bonds have been deposited. This should give us an expansion or contraction of the currency to the extent that might be desired without the enactment into law of any measure that would radically change our present system.

We complain about the lack of elasticity in our currency, and yet we have a cast-iron rule or law that will not allow it to contract or expand.

No question will so quickly unsettle and paralyze the business industries of the nation as one concerning the stability of our currency. When the foundations of our business enterprises are shaken through unwise tinkering with our currency system, the first to feel its dire effects will be those who depend upon daily toil for daily bread. No class in the country will be more seriously affected and none should be more deeply interested in the stability of the currency than the wage earner, "whose heart is the citadel of a nation's power and whose arm is the bulwark of liberty." [Loud applause.]

Public opinion in this country should be so strongly and so thoroughly grounded on the great foundation truths of finance and currency that we shall not only get right, but stay right. In the war with Spain our Army and Navy displayed invincible prowess, bravery, and skill, and won the admiration of the world. I trust that the financial and commercial interests of the country and the representatives of the people in Congress assembled will no less fearlessly press forward toward the attainment of a monetary system that shall command what our country in other particulars enjoys, the respect, the confidence, and the admiration of the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, in addition to my time the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat [Mr. PUGSLEY] yields me the balance of his time, and I yield twenty-five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, we have been told over and over again that the Republican party has redeemed its pledge and promise to the people and has established the currency on a gold standard, upon a firm foundation, and that therefore the money question is settled or is dead, yet it seems to have an annual resurrection in the Congress of the United States. I have observed in my brief experience that people are generally very much interested in something which they have not got. In the hard times following the panic of 1893, when everyone was "hard up," the money question was of absorbing interest.

And I think I have observed, at least of late years, that the American people take but little interest in the preservation of the rights of other people so long as they feel secure in the possession of their own, and I have wondered sometimes if it was because of this seeming universal interest in things hoped for rather than those possessed that makes the American Congressman take such perennial interest in the money question.

Is it because of this same trait in human nature that now, when certain individuals and corporations have about exhausted their own and the country's credit in the issuance of stocks and bonds which have no actual value in fact except as the same shall be wrung out of the pockets of labor—having thereby increased by $5,000,000,000 the debt which labor must finally pay, and being accordingly embarrassed with the extent of their obligations which they have unloaded upon the country or the banks, they now propose to change the character of those obligations into promises to pay, and by fiat law give them the power and the force and the effect of money?

It seems, Mr. Chairman, that the gentlemen who have the control of financial legislation in this House are determined to give us their remedy for the financial evils which, in their judgment, afflict the body politic in homeopathic doses, rather than remove the entire appendix of Government-made money, as they doubtless would like to do, by one radical operation. Hence we have them bringing in now only the asset and inflation portion of their financial cure, doubtless reserving the branch bank and the monopoly features for some future time.

Although, Mr. Chairman, the business ailment of the country is one purely of an excess of wind and water upon the stomach of overcapitalized corporations, and although no legitimate interest whatever is complaining, it seems as if the financial doctors of this House were determined to mix a little money medicine for the country anyway, not that we are sick now, but that we may become sick some time in the future—if not in the spring, then next fall, or any time prior to 1904.

Now, the remedy which they offer is, in my judgment, entirely an experimental one. They themselves do not know what effect it will have upon the country, neither does anyone else. And I would like to suggest to the House and the committee that the country is in a rather healthy condition just at present. I once knew a man out in the Western country where I live who had great faith in doctors. He was "feeling good, enjoying life"—was happy. But he wanted to feel better, and so he consulted a doctor, took physic, and died.

Mr. Chairman, the merchants, and the miners, and the manufacturers, and the farmers, who produce the wealth of this country, maintain its prosperity, and pay its debts, are not asking for this legislation. Strangely enough, the people in the East are agitating this legislation, ostensibly in the interest of the people who live in the West and the South or in the agricultural portions of the country, although no Western or Southern interest is asking for it. On the contrary, in that portion of our national domain where I live—that portion once known as the Great American Desert, and now the granary of the American continent—the business men, through their banking associations and business gatherings, in general, are protesting against the legislation contemplated in this bill.

In the State which I represent—more absolutely dependent upon agriculture for the prosperity of its people than any other State of the Union—the State of Nebraska, the candidates for Congress on the Republican ticket were kept busy, both on and off the stump, during the last campaign, in telling the people over and over again that it was not the policy of their party to inflict such legislation as this upon the country. In my judgment if the people of that great Commonwealth had believed you intended to surrender to private corporations the control of our country's currency, with which is carried on the business of the most powerful people in the world, they would have buried your candidates so deep beneath an avalanche of condemning ballots as to have been beyond the hope of resurrection at the trump of doom.

Mr. Chairman, it can not be successfully maintained that there is shortage of currency, of money, or of credit in this country. There has been, as everyone knows, during the last four or five years an overballooning of credit—the issuance of stocks and bonds by wind-blown and water-soaked corporations. The people of the West, especially in the agricultural portions, are in an exceedingly prosperous condition at this time. They have plenty of money and plenty of credit. We have learned in that country the proper way to maintain credit and get money. We have been taught by business experience; and we have more of wheat, and more of pork, and more of beef, and more of corn—more of everything that puts money in the farmer's pocket—than we have had for many years.

I remember that in 1896 gentlemen came to us from the East and told us that we would lose our credit and not be able to borrow any more Eastern capital if we dared to declare for bimetallism, because of the fear that we might pay our debts in depreciated dollars; but the unanswerable logic of events has proved that what the West needed was not the ability to borrow more money, but rather a price for our products that would enable us to pay what we had already borrowed.

We were told at the same time that we would be punished by the East refusing to send us any more money, but by the irony of fate we have, in four years out of the six following that election, been given a crop that has enabled us to send our products down across this continent 2,000 miles, down to the great money center of New York, where every day a larger volume of business is transacted than in all the other clearing-house cities of the United States put together, where one-third of all the loans and one-third of all the deposits in all the national banks are held, and swept their entire surplus reserve out to the farmers beyond the Mississippi River and put those great clearing-house institutions into that condition that they could not loan a man in business a dollar, except in violation of their charters.

Now, Mr. Chairman, they tell us in their report here, or at least I read it so, that this forces an unfortunate liquidation upon the part of those who deal in stocks and bonds and gamble in the great money centers of this country upon the products of the farmer's toil. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to you, in my judgment, that what the country needs now is not so much a further expansion of credit, but rather a reservation to the legitimate interests of the country the credit and money which they alone produce and maintain. I want to say further upon that very question that we have had a great deal of talk about antitrust legislation in this House and in the country.

In my judgment, the trust promoting and trust building which was stopped in this country last fall was not stopped because of the fear of any legislation that would be passed by the Congress of the United States or because of any lawsuits instituted against them, but because of the withholding of money and of credits with which to deal in those stocks and bonds in the money centers of the country; and when the merchants and farmers and business men and the legitimate interests of this country at times make a demand upon those with whom they trust their money that that money shall be returned to them for legitimate business purposes, they do more to stop the building and promoting of trusts than will any legislation that can be passed by the Congress of the United States as it is organized to-day.

Mr. Chairman, after reading through the first portion of the report and listening to the instructive speech of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]—because it was a good speech, a logical speech from his standpoint, and showed a wonderful amount of information, and which I hope everyone will read—I was impressed with the fact that he, along with others who have supported the bill, has come at last to admit the principle of the Democratic party upon the great question of finance, so far as the quantity theory of money is concerned.

Anyone who reads this report and listened to the argument of the eloquent gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE], who talked last evening, and others who debated upon this question, will see that the real question at issue has never been as to what should be our standard of value, for that of itself is not worth the effort which has been put forth on this question. The question was not primarily to determine whether the standard of value should be green or yellow or white money, whether gold or silver or paper; but the issue in 1896 and the issue now and the issue in the future is whether the money of the country shall be controlled by the Government of the United States, where the Constitution put it, or whether you shall surrender it to private corporations for their control and profit. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now the gentlemen, a little farther along in their report, say as follows:

> As your committee has just pointed out, however, the withdrawal from the banks of $100,000,000 of reserve money last fall, when there was an actual need of about $200,000,000 of additional credit to properly handle the crops of the country, must have contracted loans or curtailed credit by at least $400,000,000. Anomalous as it may seem, as our needs for the tools of trade increase they as certainly at the same time decrease correspondingly.

Now, if there is any valid argument that can be urged in support of this bill it is this matter of expansion of credit and the claim that the demand of the farmers and the miners of the country for the money contracts the loaning capacity of the bank. Let us see. I have before me an abstract of the report of the banks as furnished by the Comptroller of the Currency for the 15th day of September and the 25th day of November last. I find that the loans of the banks of this country expanded from July 16 to September 15, some $58,000,000. I find that the loans were expanded from September 15 to November 25 some $23,000,000; or, altogether, the banks in the face of the demand for the money, instead of contracting their loans, expanded their loans $81,000,000.

In other words, these gentlemen under the conditions that now exist, apparently made a mistake as to what actually did occur of $500,000,000, and I ask if they made such a mistake as this, under conditions that are known, how much graver and more serious mistakes may they lead us into under conditions which are entirely problematical in the future, under this bill? Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to speak briefly upon three fundamental principles in this bill, because they are the three points upon which it is an innovation upon existing law or recognized financial policy. I am opposed to this bill primarily because it is the first step as a means to create a money monopoly.

Now, a monopoly is not necessarily a dangerous thing if it is a government monopoly, but private monopoly always tends to corruption in republics, and I believe is inimical to the preservation of free institutions. And this bill further is open to the charge, in my judgment, that it is an inflation measure, first, because it provides a certain amount of inflation under the conditions that now exist. It does not provide necessarily for the retirement of any money that is in circulation now, but it does make possible, as admitted in the report here, an increase of something like one hundred and forty or one hundred and fifty millions of dollars in our circulating medium.

It is possible under this bill that there shall be an unlimited inflation of the currency, because they have not limited the number of banks of issue. As the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] admitted to me the other day when I asked him the question, there will be now under the operation of this bill about 5,000 banks of issue. Upon the passage of this bill, if it shall be found profitable, we may fairly expect that all the other small State banks in the country, and large ones, so far as that is concerned, now engaged in ordinary commercial business, will also go into the note-issuing business, because it will be found profitable to them, and it is not unreasonable to expect that in the next five years we would have at least 10,000 banks of issue.

And instead of other nations that have tried such a policy, such as is indicated in this bill, permitting an unlimited number of banks of issue, every nation that has tried it has found sooner or later that under booming business conditions and during periods of speculation too many banks have gone into the note-issuing business, as any man can understand who studies the subject, and therefore there has always followed an inflation of money with consequent disaster to business.

Every nation that has permitted banks of issue, not excepting ourselves, have learned by bitter experience the truth of this financial axiom. And to-day every nation in the world that permits notes to be issued based upon assets instead of permitting an unlimited number of banks, as is possible under this bill, have all shaped their legislation in exactly the opposite direction by creating a monopoly of note issues and limiting the number of banks to as few as possible. No country that holds any place among the financial powers of the earth countenances any such policy as is contemplated in this bill.

The British people for more than a century permitted an unlimited number of banks to go into the note-issuing business, but over and over again in times of great business prosperity they experienced an inflation of the currency because too many banks engaged in the business, a condition of affairs which was inevitably followed by disaster, and specie payment was suspended over and over again, until finally, in 1844, they passed an act under which it has not been possible since that time to establish a single new bank of issue in Scotland or England or Ireland. And, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] stated the other day, there are now only 11 banks of issue in Scotland, and in England or Scotland or Ireland if any bank goes into liquidation voluntarily or fails, no new bank of issue is permitted to be established in its place.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In a moment. Let me finish my statement.

No new bank of issue is permitted to take its place, but the right to these note issues reverts to the Bank of England.

And so it is in Germany, to which the gentleman also referred. At one time Germany had an unlimited number of banks of issue, but Germany found that that condition of things was unsound, and now they have a law which is practically equivalent to the English law. No new banks of issue are permitted to be established in Germany. They have created a monopoly, and if you are going to surrender this note-issuing function to private institutions you must make a monopoly if you make it safe.

Austria has only one such bank of issue. France has one, Spain has one. The Kingdom of Italy at one time permitted a number of banks of issue, but because of the disaster which was brought upon the country by that system she has also limited the number of banks of issue.

Canada has been referred to by the gentleman as being a country which furnished a system parallel to that proposed in this bill; but Canada has found a way of creating an absolute monopoly, a monopoly which establishes as absolute a limitation upon the number of banks there as if the maximum had been decreed by law.

The gentleman stated in his remarks the other day, in reply to my question, that there were only 34 banks of issue in Canada. There were 36 banks of issue in Canada under the law as it was passed in 1890, thirteen years ago. No new bank of issue is permitted in Canada with less than half a million dollars capital; and if we permitted no new banks of issue with less than $5,000,000 capital it would correspond probably to the condition in Canada, taking into consideration our population, our wealth, and our domain, compared with that of Canada.

These banks in Canada are permitted to establish branch institutions all over the country, and they have absorbed the entire business of that country so completely that now no new bank of issue is practicable, or will be in the future, because there is no opportunity for them to get sufficient business to be profitable; so that there is as absolute a monopoly as if it was established by law, and you have got to come sooner or later to the point of establishing such a monopoly here if you allow private concerns to issue these notes and if you are going to make this system a safe one.

Now, I do not believe the gentlemen themselves who brought in this bill would have offered us this kind of a measure if they could have had their will in the matter.

They have not offered such a bill as they would like to make a law, but one going as far as they thought possible and yet command votes enough to pass it. Indeed, the gentlemen indicated that they realized the situation when in their original bill they inserted a provision whereby a bank with a capital of $5,000,000 might establish branches all over this country, the result of which would have been that these great institutions would rapidly have absorbed the banking business of the country; and they would compel all the small banks either to get into their trust or go out of business, and you would thus have a monopoly created just as surely as has been done in Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the gentleman to say that they were not permitted to establish any new banks in Scotland.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not banks of issue. They are not allowed to establish any new banks of issue.

The difference in the amount of capital required by banks of issue, the absence of the branch bank feature, the amount and character of the reserves required, and other provisions upon which this bill differs radically from the Canadian plan, make any inferences drawn from the experience of Canada as to what effect the passage of this bill would have finds little foundation in fact.

The second point upon which I consider this bill is objectionable under our present financial system and reserve requirements is that it declares that the notes to be issued under it shall be made specifically payable in gold. In the first place, we have already numerous kinds of money, and I certainly object to having another added to them. The present bank notes issued by national banks are redeemable in lawful money only, and that is the only requirement that ought to be asked of the banks, because they must accept under the law several other forms of money other than gold on deposit and in payment of their debts, and it is not sound business policy to require them to pay their obligations in any other kind of money than those they can lawfully exact for obligations due to them.

Under this bill it is perfectly possible and probable that millions of money should be issued without any reference to the amount of gold in the banks and available for their redemption. It has always been so in every nation that has tried such a policy as this, and any system of note issues that fails to take into consideration in empowering their issue the actual amount of money available for their redemption has sooner or later led to the dangers of suspension of specie payments.

The gentlemen have doubtless believed that because they make the notes specifically payable in gold and that the Government redeems them under certain conditions, the banks will never be required to redeem any great quantity of them in gold. But when the inevitable reaction comes, and gold is demanded for export, and for hoarding these notes—being an easy means of obtaining it, they will all have to be either retired or else furnish a constant siphon with which to draw the gold from the banks, who upon the other hand will have no means whereby to get the gold except from the Government of the United States or to buy it in the open market.

The fact that the Government supervises the redemption of these notes will not make their redemption by the banks any easier; it only raises the hope that the demand will not be made upon the banks. Before a system of gold-note issues is entered upon by any nation, the money of that country must consist of gold as the only money of final redemption, with silver as a subsidiary or token coin and not a legal tender, and the currency of the country to be issued by banking corporations. Every nation that does not have that kind of a currency only requires that the banks shall pay their notes in the lawful money of the country, as does both France and Canada.

France, retaining her reserves in silver and gold and Canada in specie and Dominion notes, corresponding to our Treasury notes, so that the banks of those countries, when gold is demanded of them for export or for hoarding, have a means whereby to protect themselves and compel those who want the gold to pay the proper premium for it upon the open market. Every nation that has opened the door to the possibility of unlimited note issues, made specifically payable in coin and issued without a proper relation being maintained as to the amount actually pledged and maintained for their redemption, has sooner or later learned in humiliation the disastrous sequel to the story of him who preaches that there will be no day of payment.

As the law is now the assets upon which the banks must realize to meet their notes are payable in lawful money. Under this bill they would be required to receive their obligations in three or four different kinds of money and yet bound to pay their notes in one kind of money—gold.

Mr. HILL. That is the same as the law is now. The bank is not required to hold any United States notes, but it is required to redeem its notes in United States notes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. To redeem them in lawful money.

Mr. HILL. In United States notes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This requires them to redeem over their counters in gold.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. They are practically not required to redeem these notes at all.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The third point upon which I wish to challenge the correctness and justice of the principle injected into this bill is that after we have surrendered to the corporations the profit and power to be derived from issuing money made a legal tender to all the banks and to all the myriad necessities of the Government yet we do not propose here in this bill to have the United States guarantee the final redemption of these notes in gold if for any reason the banks shall fail to make them good.

It is true that in return for a quasi guaranteeing of their notes the banks give the Government a first lien upon their assets, but the trouble with this is that while it is sauce for the note holder it is decidedly cold victuals for the depositor, who frequently even now receives little enough from the failed bank. Under such a system as this it is quite evident that the depositor would fare far worse than he now does in case of failure, because the Government is bound to realize upon the assets in order to reimburse the guaranty fund in case of failure.

Gentlemen say further that this money is not guaranteed by the Government of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say here that when it comes to the question of money you can not altogether depend upon the experience of other nations as to how the people of this country will receive that money. We have had a large experience in unguaranteed notes during the State-bank issues, and the people of the United States will look with suspicion upon any money unless it is guaranteed by the National Government.

I remember in 1894, when this asset-currency plan was first submitted, a banker's convention up here in the State of Pennsylvania was discussing the principles involved in asset currency, and after several gentlemen had dilated upon the security of this plan and the expediency of it, a gentleman arose, who was evidently old in experience, and said, "Gentlemen, I do not care how you may secure this money and how expedient it may appear, unless the American Government guarantees your money the American people will not have it, because of their experience in the past."

Mr. Chairman, after all, these gentlemen have based the real security of their money upon the great privilege of governmental legal tender and governmental monopoly. Their money is good for the same reason that the silver and United States notes are good. Every one of them is good, because every one of them is an American dollar, a legal tender for the billions of dollars due the banks and the billions of dollars due the National Government, and with limited issue that demand will sustain it. Everything that is behind the flag is behind that dollar—our matchless credit, our boundless resources, our illimitable possibilities; the all-controlling, all-compelling, all-absorbing demands of American business and American commerce.

The only way that you can assault that dollar is to assault your nation's dignity and honor and dispute her proud position as first in the grand galaxy of nations. To deny that dollar is to deny your country's present greatness, her future grandeur, and her glory. To deny it is to deny the hope and aspiration that animates the breast of every good American citizen—that Columbia shall yet sit enthroned here between her silver seas, the undisputed queen and master of the commercial world. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this bill is largely experimental, and in its recognized principles it follows the line of absolute monopoly, which underlies and supports every empire in the world to-day. It is the enthronement of monopoly. It is the very apotheosis of special privilege. By the granting of governmental favors we have enthroned monopoly in control of the transportation of the country; by the granting of special privileges we have enthroned monopoly in control of the industrial interests of the country, and monopoly has now begun its assault upon that last citadel of the people's liberty—the people's money. It is the last great source of privilege and power yet remaining in control of the National Government, and it is the record of history that when once a brave and free people such as ours ever loses control of a great and priceless privilege, such as this, it has always been lost to them forever. Because I believe the bill is experimental, monopolistic, and unsound I shall oppose it with my vote. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, this is preeminently a period of national reconciliation in these happily reunited States. In the "chorus of the Union," to which President Lincoln so eloquently alluded in his first inaugural, the predominant tone now is peace and good will between the North and the South, and between all sections. Occasionally, however, and only occasionally, a discordant note is heard; and such discords appear all the harsher and more offensive on account of the general harmony.

Such a discordant note is contained in the fourth section of the Bowman Act. This act is justly held in high regard as greatly facilitating the settlement of proper claims against the Government; but its fourth section expressly bars out the great bulk of Southern claims for supplies furnished to or taken by the Federal forces in the civil war and directly afterwards, because it makes a claimant's loyalty to the United States Government during that war essential to the validity of his claim. Of course, this excludes the great majority of Southern claims which in every other respect would be recognized by the law as just and deserving of payment.

Mr. Chairman, the time is ripe for the repeal of this section of the Bowman Act, and I appeal to my friends and brethren of all parties here assembled as representatives of all sections of our beloved Union to unite with one accord in supporting the bill (H. R. 15518) which I offer for such repeal.

I urge this partly from considerations of abstract justice and partly from considerations of national amity and fraternity.

As to the former, it is manifestly unjust to discriminate in this manner against the former Confederates. They did fight against the Union for four years, it is true, but after that terrible conflict had been waged and concluded in a manner in the highest degree honorable to both sides the Confederates accepted the result in good faith, were invited by the North to resume their former relations with the Union, and did so. By that act the Southerners again became United States citizens in good and regular standing, and since then the Union has had no better or more loyal or more devoted citizens than these same ex-Confederates.

This being the case, where is the justice, where is the sense or logic in excluding the former Confederates from the equal operations and benefits of the laws of our common country? They have been restored to full fellowship as citizens; they stand shoulder to shoulder with the men of the North in our Army and Navy; they are eligible to all offices; they preside in our courts; they make laws for the nation in these very halls of Congress. They have in all respects the rights and privileges of citizens of Massachusetts or of Illinois.

All, did I say? Yes: all—but one. If the Government owes them money for value received, they can not collect it, because they were loyal to their own section during the civil war! The Government will gladly accept their services in the Army, the Navy, the legislative forum, the court room, the public offices, but it will not pay what it owes them! This is, in brief, the effect of the fourth section of the Bowman Act, and it is a legal absurdity and monstrosity. I, for one, do not believe that this section correctly represents the sentiments and the purposes of the people of the North. I do not believe that the amnesty which they offered was amnesty with a string to it. I do not believe that General Grant had any such idea when he said "Let us have peace," or when he freely gave back to General Lee his surrendered sword and generously told Lee's soldiers to keep their horses as they would need them for their spring plowing. I believe that if the people of the North fully understood the matter they would be the first ones to demand the repeal of this obnoxious section. They would feel themselves dishonored by continuing on the statute book such an exhibition of petty meanness toward their Southern brethren.

As it stands now the law, by implication, admits the justice of these claims of Southerners for supplies furnished to the Northern Army during the war and for a considerable period after the termination of the war, and that, if proven, such claims shall be paid, provided that the claimant was loyal to the Union during the war, but otherwise not. Why not? If the claim is intrinsically just, why should it not be paid? Is the claimant an outlaw, an exile, a criminal, a miscreant, an anarchist, an enemy of the State? Not so. He is a good citizen, perhaps a judge, or a Federal officer, or a United States soldier, devoting his life to the welfare of the nation. No matter; he fought with the South in the civil war, following his honest convictions of duty, so he shall not be paid!

Mr. Chairman, I shall not spend time in repeating the well-known arguments as to the right or the wrong of the Southern secession movement. But I will call to the attention of the House the notable address made before the New England Society of Charleston, S. C., last December, by Charles Francis Adams, a lineal descendant, and a worthy descendant, of those famous old patriots, Federalists, and Republicans of Massachusetts, Samuel Adams, John Adams, and John Quincy Adams. In this address Mr. Adams asserted that long and careful study of the questions and conditions precedent to the civil war had convinced him that in that struggle "everybody was right; nobody was wrong." In his opinion, he continued, that war was an inevitable conflict over the abstract and concrete question of sovereignty, and "either side could offer good ground, historical and legal, for any attitude taken in regard to it."

Continuing, he said: "Every State of the Federation became a member of the Union with mental reservations. The one thing our ancestry united in most apprehending was a centralized government. From New Hampshire to Georgia such a government was associated with the idea of a foreign régime. The people clung to the local autonomy—the sovereignty of the State."

As I have said, I shall not dwell on this old and well-nigh exhausted subject, and I have quoted from Mr. Adams in order to indicate what I believe to be the general sentiment at present among the intelligent, fair-minded, and well-informed men of the North of all parties. It is generally conceded now, in the North I am sure, that the South at least sincerely believed it was right in those four years of war. The South warmly espoused the affirmative side of the State's rights doctrine, which was then agitating the country, and although the North adopted the negative side, I know full well that deep down in the hearts of every true Northern American is an ardent love for his own State. Does not the Vermonter dearly love Vermont? Does not the Ohioian idolize Ohio? Does not the Minnesotian worship Minnesota, and the Californian swear by California? Who fought more ferociously at Gettysburg than the Pennsylvania troops, who were defending not only the Union, but also their own dear State against the invader? As for myself, I could never tire of proclaiming my intense love for my own dear State of Alabama, which I honestly consider the fairest country, with the noblest and most chivalrous community of people, on the face of the earth; but every Southerner entertains like sentiments of love and veneration for his own State.

That war, then, was a family quarrel about a disputed family question. Brothers fought against brothers hard and long, and when at last one set of brothers conquered and carried their point they shook hands and "made up" with the other set, and the family relations were amicably resumed. But now, long years afterwards, the victorious brothers say to the other brothers, "We freely forgave you, and made it all up with you, and blotted out all of the old scores, and have no grudge against you and no fault to find with you; but we will not pay you for what we took from you while we were fighting and while you were lying weak and helpless after the fight." Would not that be a mean thing to do and say? Do you believe that the rich and prosperous and honorable North upholds any such doctrine as that?

What I have said thus far has had especial reference to the equitable, if not legal, claims of those Confederates who actually participated and fought in the war between the States and whose property was converted or taken for the use of the United States Government during the course of that unhappy internecine strife. If the justice of their claims, as active participants, appeals to you, as I am sure it must, then how much more deserving of your consideration are the claims for restitution on the part of that not inconsiderable number of Southern gentlemen of the old school whose political inclinations and affiliations before the war had been aligned with what were then popularly known as the "Old Line Whigs" or "Unionists," and who never sympathized with or approved the secession movement any more than they indorsed the stand taken by the more rabid Abolitionists who sought to free the slaves without reimbursement or even by violence. This large class of Southerners, while declining to enlist in an army for destroying the Union, when the line of demarcation was drawn and the parting of the ways was at hand, were too loyal to their section not to maintain the neutral ground allotted to those who were excused from active enlistment on condition of their sending substitutes, or pursuing the more peaceful avocations of growing food crops and running grist and flouring mills for the maintenance of the women, children, and slaves at home.

I have in mind several relevant instances in my own district in Alabama, through which General Wilson's brigade was passing about the time of the surrender at Appomattox. It was a fact that a few days after the surrender had actually taken place, but before anyone had been apprised of it in that part of the country, a handful of Confederates made a show of resistance to General Wilson's brigade at West Point, Ga., where the last battle of the war was fought. This was just on the line separating my district from Georgia. About that time, and, as stated, even several days after hostilities had ceased elsewhere and peace had been declared, considerable quantities of cotton, meat, mules, etc., were confiscated or appropriated by the Union Army from just such neutrally disposed citizens of my district, who had even submitted to a quasi social ostracism on account of their unwillingness to become active factors in the disruption of the Union. And there were plenty of similar instances in other sections of the South. But, it may be implied, with respect to this class of citizens, that an exception has been made in their favor, or in favor of those who could demonstrate their loyalty to the Union. However, mindful of this exception, my plea is here made on behalf of that class who, because of the extreme delicacy of their positions at home and the many embarrassments at best to which they were subjected in preserving the neutral middle ground pointed out, might now find difficulty in demonstrating such loyalty, or who, through pride or other considerations, have never essayed to adduce the real facts in establishing their said claims.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, all our old war claims ought to be tried and decided solely on their merits. The question of "loyalty" was res adjudicata years before the Bowman Act was conceived of. And we are not left without precedents to guide us in this matter. A study of history will show us that this case of ex post facto retaliation is, if I am not mistakon, unique in the annals of nations. In the Franco-German war of 1870, the German officers, in their advance upon Paris, had all claims from citizens of France adjudicated by a board of appraisers at the time of taking the property, and the same were promptly paid to each and every individual claimant. They also pursued the same policy toward their own citizens whose property they took or injured during the march of the German army from Berlin to Paris, and before they had reached French territory.

Indeed, there are notable precedents of the same sort in our own history. The Continental Congress voted to pay all claims incident to the Revolutionary war, without reference to the politics of the claimants and whether they were Tories or not. So in the Mexican war, General Scott ordered all property taken from private citizens of Mexico to be carefully appraised, and the same was promptly paid for by our Government. Coming down to more recent times, if the United States Government could afford to enter into an agreement with our enemy, Spain, as it did by the treaty of Paris, to pay to Spanish citizens, Cubans, and our own citizens for loss and damage of private property in Cuba by the operation of our forces, why can not the Government afford to pay, and why should it not pay, our own citizens for similar loss of property in the civil war? By that treaty of Paris not only did the United States agree with Spain, as stated, but it is now being insisted also that our Government went one step further and agreed to indemnify such sufferers for the injuries sustained from whatever source, whether through our own troops or the Spanish troops, or even through the insurgents themselves. And for the practical adjustment of these numerous claims, aggregating many millions of dollars, this Government has organized the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission now sitting in this city.

Mr. Chairman, I have so far purposely dwelt upon the equity side of this cause for which I am pleading, because my paramount hope of influencing your judgment and action is based upon my belief in the inherent sense of justice which actuates the members of this House in all their deliberations. But there is another phase of this case which will equally appeal to the understanding, as to the conscience, of this great body. Though not a lawyer, I may be justified in suggesting a few well-recognized principles of elementary law which deserve due weight in assisting your conclusions.

As demonstrated in the foregoing examples cited, our Government stands fully committed to the doctrine of such responsibility, and can not consistently assert the contrary; and so with nearly every other nation on earth. Moreover, the liability does not rest on the ground that the Government, to be held liable, has been guilty of negligence in not restraining the troops from taking or converting the property of the citizen to their use, but the general principle of law is thus stated by Baker in his treatise on international law:

> The responsibility of the State results from its neglect or inability to control the conduct of its subjects or its neglect or inability to punish the offenses and crimes which they commit.

It is futile to say that the depredations committed upon the noncombatants were necessary, and therefore unavoidable. They would not be so even in regular war. Halleck (chap. 21, sec. 18) has this to say:

> The evils resulting from irregular requisitions and foraging for the ordinary supplies of an army are so very great and so generally admitted that it has become a recognized maxim of war that the commanding officer who commits indiscriminate pillage and allows the taking of private property without a strict accountability, whether he be engaged in offensive or defensive operations, fails in his duty to his own government and violates the usages of modern warfare. It is sometimes alleged in excuse for such conduct that the general is unable to restrain his troops, but in the eyes of the law there is no excuse, for he who can not preserve order in his army has no right to command it.

I have referred to the precedent of the Mexican war. Under date of May 20, 1847, General Scott wrote from Mexico:

> If it be expected at Washington, as is now apprehended, that the Army is to support itself by forced contributions levied upon the country, we may ruin and exasperate the inhabitants and starve ourselves, for it is certain they would sooner remove and destroy the products of their farms than allow them to fall into our hands without compensation.

As to the general doctrine of such responsibility, I may here give a brief summary from Wharton's Digest:

> The resort to such measures as were adopted by the forces of the Haytian Government to suppress the local revolt against the Government and the laws may have been, and no doubt was, in the estimation of the Haytian Government, entirely justifiable; and this Government has no disposition to question the correctness of this view as to those precautionary municipal measures; but it follows, nevertheless, that the Government is answerable for the destruction of private property which may have been necessarily sacrificed to the success of such measures. (Sec. 223.)
> The position of this Government is responsible for the misconduct of its soldiers when in the field, even when acting without orders from their superiors in command. (Sec. 225, Wharton.) * * * The unarmed citizen is to be spared in person, property, and honor as much as the exigencies of war will admit. (Ibid.)

But, Mr. Chairman, the repeal of this objectionable provision is advisable, not merely on grounds of equity and law, but from considerations of national amity and neighborly good will.

As is well known, the South at the end of the civil war, and for long afterwards, was impoverished, financially ruined. It had lost all except honor. Almost all of those whose property had been appropriated by the United States Government were poor men, made poor by the war, and could ill afford to spare the supplies thus taken from them. Many of them, or their descendants, are still poor, and sorely need this money to which they are justly entitled. Thousands of dollars' worth of these claims have been barred out by technicalities hinging upon this fourth section of the Bowman Act. If it were not for these technicalities they would be paid, as they ought to be paid. I can not believe that when the facts which I have so inadequately endeavored to set forth are appreciated in their true light and force by Congress and by the general public, this measure of justice will be much longer refused to the loyal and long-suffering claimants of my State and adjacent States.

I have spoken of loyalty. This question of loyalty is the test question, the core, the crux, of the whole matter. The South does not shrink from the test. It does not plead guilty to the charge of disloyalty during the years from 1861 to 1865. Disloyalty is not the right word in that connection. The awful war between the States was upon a disagreement between the sections as to which section was loyal to the Constitution. The North said the South was disloyal, and the South said the North was disloyal. The issue of the war settled the question practically in favor of the North, and the South accepted the result in good faith. Aside from that internal dissension, where can you find more loyal citizens of the United States than the South has always furnished and furnishes to-day? Think of the valiant heroes of Georgia, Virginia, and the Carolinas in the Revolutionary war—the men who, though almost starved, barefooted, and in rags and tatters, and with only the most primitive arms and equipments, completely baffled the hosts of British regulars, and won over them an uninterrupted series of brilliant victories under the leadership of Sumter and Marion. Remember the exploits of the Southerners under Andrew Jackson in the war of 1812, and under Scott and Taylor in the Mexican war—the South furnishing far more than its equitable share of officers and troops in both those wars.

And then, as we can all remember, the South gloriously vindicated its loyalty to the Union by its conduct during the recent Spanish-American war. The sentiment has often been expressed that that war was incidentally a godsend to this country, in that it served as the final "healing act" for all the internal wounds of the past, and bound the two sections firmly together again in the bonds of genuine reconciliation and mutual love and confidence on the basis of a common patriotism. When the Spanish war broke out, the Southern Confederate veterans and their sons sprang with one accord to the defense of the Stars and Stripes, and fought for the flag on sea and land with unsurpassable bravery and vigor. The man who "held the fort" at Habana, single-handed, in the midst of open and hidden enemies, and in constant danger of assassination, was a Southerner of the Southerners, and the nephew of his uncle, General Lee. The first one to fall in that war was a Southerner, sealing his devotion to the Union with his heart's blood. And no State was behind Alabama in its services to the Union in that international struggle. Witness the gallant Hobson, whose act of daring self-sacrifice in the Merrimac will go down into history for all time. Witness the superb generalship of Wheeler, under whom President Roosevelt has declared he felt honored to serve—Wheeler, once the great Confederate cavalry leader, now one of the strong pillars of the reunited Republic. Aye, witness General Wheeler's daughters, on their missions of mercy in the hospital camps.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, the Southerners are in fact as much citizens, and as good citizens, of the United States to-day as are the Northerners, and they should be treated as such by the laws. The South does her full share of the fighting for the Union; she does her full share of the work of the country; she bears her full share of the burdens of the country; she gladly pays her full share of the $150,000,000 paid in pensions each year for Union soldiers; she is striving equally with the North for the honor, welfare, and advancement of the whole country. The two sections are in perfect unity, peace, and concord, each with the other, and all acts inconsistent with this so desirable condition of affairs should be forthwith repealed and thrown into the rubbish heap over the back fence of the past.

This fourth section of the Bowman Act should be the first one to go. Let it be thrown out at once, Mr. Chairman—the sooner the better—and all the people will say "Amen!" [Loud applause.]

I ask leave to incorporate in the RECORD with my remarks the Bowman Act referred to, together with a legal argument submitted by Mr. Gilbert Moyers, an eminent lawyer of this city.

ACTS OF CONGRESS RELATING TO THE PROSECUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL CASES.

THE BOWMAN ACT.

An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report the same to the committee or to the House by which the case was transmitted for its consideration.

SEC. 2. That when a claim or matter is pending in any of the Executive Departments which may involve controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found, the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall report its findings and opinions to the department by which it was transmitted for its guidance and action.

SEC. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction or damage to property by the Army or Navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operation of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

SEC. 4. In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact; and unless the said court shall, on a preliminary inquiry, find that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same were taken as aforesaid, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war, the court shall not have jurisdiction of such cause, and the same shall, without further proceedings, be dismissed.

SEC. 5. That the Attorney-General, or his assistants, under his direction, shall appear for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States in all cases which may be transmitted to the Court of Claims under this act, with the same power to interpose counterclaims, offsets, defenses for fraud practiced or attempted to be practiced by claimants, and other defenses, in like manner as he is now required to defend the United States in said court.

SEC. 6. That in the trial of such cases no person shall be excluded as a witness because he or she is a party to or interested in the same.

SEC. 7. That reports of the Court of Claims to Congress under this act, if not finally acted upon during the session at which they are reported, shall be continued from session to session and from Congress to Congress until the same shall be finally acted upon.

Approved March 3, 1883.

THE TUCKER ACT.

[24 Stat. L., p. 505.]

An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States.

This is an act providing for the prosecution of general jurisdiction cases, except section 14, which relates to Congressional cases, and is as follows:

"SEC. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled 'An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government,' and report to such House the facts in the case and the amount, where the same can be liquidated, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy." Approved March 3, 1887. (Vol. 30, Stat. L., pp. 494, 495.)

"LACHES" AS AN ALLEGED OBJECTION TO THE PAYMENT BY CONGRESS OF CERTAIN SO-CALLED "BOWMAN AND TUCKER ACT" FINDINGS.

One of the chief purposes of the Tucker Act of 1887 was to relieve claimants from the hardships of certain statutes (which operated as statutes of limitations and bars) in the prosecution of claims against the United States for stores and supplies. The practical working in the court of the Bowman Act showed apparent injustice and great hardship to certain claimants. Relief of some kind was demanded, and the response thereto was the Tucker Act. The portion of the Tucker Act in respect to "laches" shows (by its language) that Congress intended to be very liberal toward claimants, and practically to repeal all statutes of limitations and statutes in bar of the prosecution of claims against the United States. It instructed the court to report whatever facts might appear tending to show that the claimants were not charged with want of due diligence. The doctrine of "laches" as applied in the courts of equity always goes to the conscience of the court. It is intended to relieve against the hardships of statutes, and somewhat of the common law.

The Tucker Act does not, in terms or by intendment, prohibit the court from making favorable findings for claimants, or guide Congress in providing the payment for findings. The Government does not permit any statute of limitations to run against itself when it undertakes to collect debts for itself. Why should it not treat its own citizens with similar consideration? In a very large proportion of the claims for "stores and supplies" the best evidence (and sometimes the only evidence) is in the archives of the Government. It has been either difficult or impossible for claimants to obtain this evidence in their favor, and never to obtain it except as an act of grace by the heads of departments or on an order of the court. It is apparent (without argument) that the Government can be guilty of no greater injustice toward its loyal citizens than to put up a bar of exclusion and apply the doctrine of "laches" when its various departments hold the only proofs (or most of the proofs) by which the citizen can establish his right.

It was never intended in any system of law that the doctrine of "laches" should be applied in suits against the Government. This doctrine applies almost exclusively in equity causes. It goes to the conscience of the court or the crown, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to find in the concrete any "conscience" in any legislative body, because there the individual member is guided by his own conscience, acts upon his own independent judgment, and "conscience" as it exists in a court of equity, or under a monarchial system, is wholly inconsistent with the legislative tribunal composed of independent members and two separate and independent bodies. The result is that any and all considerations of "laches," as applied in the courts, should be abandoned by Congress in determining whether the amounts stated in the findings of the Court of Claims under either the Bowman or Tucker act should be paid or not.

In this contention we are not without precedent, as Congress has recognized the liability of the Government by appropriations to pay the findings of the Court of Claims where loyalty and the merits have been determined favorably, without regard to laches. In the act of March 3, 1899, will be found appropriations to pay the following claims allowed by the court under the Tucker Act, where the court found especially in each case:

A. D. MEUILLON, DECEASED.

[52d Cong., 1st sess., H. R. Doc. 254.]

In this case the court found as follows:

"The deceased claimant was a native and citizen of France, and at the time of the taking of the property a resident alien within the United States. His claim was never presented to the Commissioners sitting under the treaty with France, January 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L., p. 673), and is barred by Article XI of the treaty. Neither was it ever presented to the Southern Claims Commission nor to any officer of the United States.

"The claimant has established no facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of the treaty with France above referred to should be removed, and no facts which tend to excuse the deceased claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.

ADELINE N. LARCHE.

[55th Cong., 2d sess., H. R. Doc. 413.]

The following finding as to laches was made in this case:

"The claim was not presented to the Commissioners of Claims under the act 3d March, 1871, and is consequently barred under the provisions of the act 15th June, 1878 (20 Stat. L., p. 550, sec. 5). No evidence has been offered by the claimant under the act of 3d March, 1887 (24 Stat. L., p. 505, sec. 14), 'bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.'"

GEORGE GORMAN, DECEASED.

[52d Cong., 1st sess., H. R. Doc. 202.]

The finding as to laches in this case was as follows:

"The claim was not presented to the Commissioners of Claims. The only 'facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting the claim' (24 Stat. L., p. 505, sec. 14) are that George Gorman died intestate in 1869, leaving minor grandchildren as his heirs, and no letters of administration were taken on his estate during the time when the claim could have been filed before the Commissioners of Claims. The claim was first presented to Congress in December, 1883, by the said heirs. The eldest heir came of age in 1871."

In the act of May 27, 1902, is the following case:

GEORGE B. CALDWELL, ADMINISTRATOR HAMLIN CALDWELL, DECEASED.

[57th Cong., 1st sess., H. R. Doc. 214.]

The following was the finding in this case:

"The claim was not presented to the Commissioners of Claims under the act of March 3, 1871, and is consequently barred under the provisions of the act of June 15, 1878 (20 Stat. L., 550, sec. 5). No evidence has been offered by the claimant under the act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. L., 505, sec. 14), 'bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim or applying for such grant, gift, or bounty, and any facts bearing upon the question whether the bar of any statute of limitation should be removed or which shall be claimed to excuse the claimant for not having resorted to any established legal remedy.'"

Furthermore, there was no act of Congress until that of March 3, 1871, providing for a tribunal where the claims of the loyal citizens of insurrectionary States might be adjudicated. This is the act creating what is known as the Southern Claims Commission. By the provisions of this act the commissioners were authorized to prescribe rules and regulutions as to the taking of testimony in the different cases presented to it. Among other rules prescribed by the commissioners is the following as to the taking of testimony:

"Where the claims are small, the claimants poor, and they and their witnesses live remote from Washington, it would amount to a denial of justice to require them to come here. In aid of such claimants and under the authority given to the commissioners to adopt rules and regulations for the taking of evidence, we decided to allow claimants whose claims did not exceed $3,000 to have depositions of themselves and their witnesses taken by special commissioners to be designated by us. We limited the right to claims not exceeding $3,000 because most of the claims are under that amount, and we believed that attempts to defraud the Government would generally be aimed at larger sums. With this limitation the cases have been numerous enough to employ all the time of special commissioners and to furnish us with more cases than we have had time to examine and decide."

So it will be seen that where cases exceeded $3,000 claimants were compelled to bring their witnesses to Washington.

Now, it is a well-known fact that the section of the country where these claims originated was impoverished by the depredations of the war, and the people were absolutely unable to comply with this requirement—that is, to bring witnesses from 1,000 to 1,500 miles to the capital of the nation in order to sustain the claims they had presented to said Commission. The result was that no proof was taken, and hence the claims became barred through no fault of the claimants, but simply owing to an unreasonable requirement made by Congress in the act referred to.

This is the only act upon the statute books of the United States giving relief to parties who have claims against the Government where the parties presenting claims were required to have their proof taken at the city of Washington. No such provision is to be found in the act creating any of the commissions organized to adjudicate claims, to wit, the Mixed Commission on British and American Claims, provided for in the act of Congress passed March 8, 1871. Neither were the claimants under the French and American Claims Commission required to bring their witnesses to Washington. In no case under the captured and abandoned property act were they so required, and it has not been required in any cases before the Court of Claims, involving a small or a large amount, whether falling under the general jurisdiction acts, the acts providing for the prosecution of Indian cases, or under the French spoliation act. Hence it may be safely asserted that the act of March 3, 1871, afforded a remedy beyond the ability of claimants to comply with as construed by the Commissioners of Claims, and it was not until the act of 1887, which is a general-jurisdiction act in all its provisions with the exception of section 14, that relief was afforded to Southern claimants in cases involving over $10,000, and the object of Congress in inserting that section in the act referred to is apparent. It was for the simple purpose of providing for all claims growing out of the war that were not provided for by the provisions of what is known as the Bowman Act.

Another reason for the failure of many claimants to avail themselves of the act of March 3, 1871, was the short period of time in which they could present their claims, viz, from the date of the act until March 3, 1873, only two years. It must be borne in mind that these claimants were, with few exceptions, farmers and planters, many of them residing in isolated sections of the country, far removed from towns or cities where they could come in contact with those informed as to their remedy for the losses they had sustained. Other claimants died before the act of 1871 was passed, leaving minors, who did not become aware of the existence of this tribunal until the limited time of two years had expired.

The act of Congress of March 12, 1863, known as the captured and abandoned property act, provided only for the adjudication of claims for property which was proven to have been taken by the United States forces and sold, the proceeds being converted into the United States Treasury. By reference to the decisions of the Court of Claims under that act it will be seen that wherever the claimants failed to establish the fact that their property was sold and that the money derived from such sale was placed in the Treasury their claims were dismissed for want of jurisdiction. This act, therefore, gave the Court of Claims no jurisdiction to hear and determine claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army.

That the question of laches should be disregarded in this class of claims is in strict consonance with the policy pursued by both the Committee on Claims of the Senate and the Committee on War Claims of the House in reporting favorably the bill providing for the revival of the right of action under the captured and abandoned property act. After careful consideration of this bill Congress has recognized the fact that such claimants are entitled to another day in court; that the statute of limitations prescribed for such cases—two years—was not sufficient. The statutory period in those cases was the same as that in claims before the Commissioners of Claims, but, in addition, it must be noted that those claimants were not required to bring their witnesses to Washington, but could examine them wheresoever the claimants desired their testimony to be taken. If such claimants are to be given another opportunity to prove the merits of their claims, regardless of any statute of limitations, it is submitted that those who have proven their loyalty and the taking and use of their property by the United States Army should not be denied their just due on account of any such statute.

"Laches" is never to be imputed to the Government. This doctrine has been announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, and is always recognized when the Government seeks remedies against its debtors. Why should not the Government recognize the same doctrine when its own citizens seek their remedy against the Government for losses by spoliations committed under its own authority to save itself?

These claimants were plundered that the Government might survive. "Laches" is never pleadable when the claimant was ignorant of his rights; when those rights were obscure or concealed; when he was under any legal disability, such as insanity, coverture, etc. (and when he was an heir), infancy, etc.; but for "stores and supplies" there was never any remedy until the Bowman Act, in 1883, except the limited and narrow Southern Claims Commission which was closed to those who could not afford to pay mileage and time to witnesess to and in Washington, where claims exceeded the maximum limit imposed by the law and the rule established by the Commission duly empowered to make such a rule.

Claimants for cotton could enter the Court of Claims under the captured and abandoned property act, but claimants for "stores and supplies" could not. They were shut out. The general reputation of the Government in not paying its unwritten debts is so notorious and chronic as to discourage everyone except the most daring and patient. The cases cited, supra, show that Congress in paying them established a precedent, and thereby advised claimants and their attorneys and the court that the issue of "laches" was not longer open and no evidence need be presented as to it. Attorneys have been misled in supposing that Congress no longer insisted on the technical and shadowy defense of "laches," which ill becomes a "sovereign power" to defend its coffers against long-suffering citizens. It is an ill-judged and discreditable defense. It disgraces and smirches the national name. It makes men sullen and unpatriotic. No government that repudiates unwritten debts and obligations of honor can ever be strong in the affections of the people. They can render in return only a grudging and poor service. Payment and patriotism are synonymous and convertible terms.

That "sovereign power" which pays only its "pay-roll" debts and written obligations will not survive the rust and "effacing hand of time." It plants in its own bosom the seeds of decay. These "laches" claimants have either been wholly remediless or had doled out them an impracticable remedy like the Southern Claims Commission—a bygone tribunal. By the "laches" of claimants the Government saved the interest.

Respectfully submitted by

GILBERT MOYERS For SUNDRY CLAIMANTS.

The SENATE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS AND HOUSE COMMITTEE ON WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LAWRENCE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16228, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AUTOMATIC COUPLERS AND SAFETY APPLIANCES.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report and statement to be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes, and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "and shall apply in all cases, whether or not the couplers brought together are of the same kind, make, or type."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "to," insert the words "train brakes."

On page 2, line 4, after the word "all," insert the word "trains."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of amendment numbered 2 the words, "Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon application and after full hearing, decrease said minimum percentage as to any common carrier for a stated limited time; and provided that in no case shall such reduction permit the running of any train with less power or train brakes than are required by section 1 of the act of March 2, 1893;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

IRVING P. WANGER,
J. S. SHERMAN,
W. C. ADAMSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. B. FORAKER,
J. H. MILLARD,
MURPHY J. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill S. 3530 make the following statement:

The amendments agreed upon to secure the first amendment of the House are chiefly by way of verbal correction and make more perfect the provisions sought to be secured by the original amendment.

The second amendment fixed the minimum percentage of air-braked cars which must have their brakes used, with authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase or decrease such minimum. The amendment to this amendment withdraws the authority to reduce such minimum.

Amendments Nos. 3 and 4 provide that the provisions of the act shall not go into effect until September 1, 1903.

Amendment No. 5 continues the duty by common carriers to observe all the requirements of the act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896, and extends the provisions of that act as to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to district attorneys to this act.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes the following announcement:

The Clerk read as follows:

House members of the committee to represent the Congress of the United States at the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty for the purchase of the Louisiana Territory—JAMES A. TAWNEY, JAMES S. SHERMAN, THAD M. MAHON, RICHARD BARTHOLDT, H. C. VAN VOORHIS, RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, JESSE OVERSTREET, JAMES R. MANN, WALTER I. SMITH, JAMES M. MILLER, E. J. BURKETT, S. M. ROBERTSON, C. L. BARTLETT, JOHN F. SHAFROTH, JAMES HAY.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 16910. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 7407. An act to authorize the Donora Southern Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania; and

S. 7337. An act to amend an act of December 21, 1898, entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to American seamen, for the protection of such seamen, and to promote commerce," in respect to allotments.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WAGONER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, to avoid misinterpretation of the unanimous consent granted to the minority as to filing their views in the contested-election case of Wagoner against Butler, I wish to state that the minority has been engaged upon those views ever since 9 o'clock this morning. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will not ask unanimous consent to extend the time until 12 o'clock to-night, and let them be filed before that time with the Public Printer. We will probably get them ready within an hour.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, we desire that the minority shall have that privilege, and I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the minority in the St. Louis contested-election case may have until 12 o'clock to-night to file their views with the Government Printer, to be printed in the RECORD in the morning. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The views of the minority are as follows:

The undersigned members of the Committee on Elections No. 2 dissent from the conclusions reached by the majority in the above-entitled case, and respectfully present the following reasons therefor:

The official returns gave the contestee a plurality of 6,293, as shown by the following vote—

at the Congressional election held November 4, 1902, in a special election called by the governor of Missouri to fill a vacancy in the Fifty-seventh Congress occasioned by the declaration of this House in its resolution adopted June 28, 1902, declaring that no valid election had been theretofore held to fill the seat from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri in the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. Butler was the regular unanimous nominee of the Democratic party in that district for the election for member of Congress to fill the vacancy in the Fifty-seventh Congress. He was likewise the regular unanimous nominee of the Democratic party for the seat in the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri. As a candidate against him for the seat in the Fifty-eighth Congress George D. Reynolds was the Republican nominee. For the seat in the Fifty-seventh Congress, to fill the vacancy, no regular nomination was made by the Republican party.

The name of George C. R. Wagoner, who had circulated a petition to be placed on the ballot as a candidate nominated by electors, was, by the board of election commissioners, after the Republican party had failed to make a regular Republican nomination, placed upon the official Republican ballot without protest from the contestee.

December 2 contestant presented a memorial to this House setting forth his notice of contest, and claiming to have been duly elected a member of this House. In December of this session a resolution was adopted by the House which was as follows:

"RESOLUTION.

"Resolved, That in the contested election case of George C. R. Wagoner v. James J. Butler, from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, the contestee shall be required to serve upon the contestant his answer to notice of contest on or before December 15, 1902, and that the time for taking and completing testimony in such case shall be limited as follows: The contestant shall be allowed from December 15, 1902, until and including January 3, 1903, in which to take testimony; the contestee shall be allowed from January 3, 1903, until and including January 27, 1903, for the taking of his testimony; and the contestant shall be allowed from January 27, 1903, until and including February 1, 1903, for the taking of testimony in rebuttal.

"As soon as the testimony shall have been received by the Clerk of this House it shall at once be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 2, and the said committee shall proceed to the consideration of the case, and, having first afforded to the parties an opportunity to be heard as to the merits of the same, shall report to this House its conclusions with respect to such case in time to afford to the House an opportunity to pass upon the same during the present session of Congress. Except so far as herein otherwise provided, this case shall be governed by the ordinary rules of procedure in contested Congressional election cases."

The notice of contest charged that in 63 of the total of 116 election precincts in the district there were such irregularities as would warrant Congress in depriving Mr. Butler of the seat, and confirming Mr. Wagoner as a Representative from the Twelfth Congressional district in this Congress.

At the very beginning of the report of the majority of this committee the partisan character of the same and the utterly unfair attitude of the majority of this committee is evidenced by the unwarranted and undignified attack which is made upon the eastern portion of the district, which embraces the precincts which returned pluralities in favor of Mr. Butler. These precincts in toto are characterized by the report as "the worst portions of the city and contain the lowest classes of her inhabitants." This characterization is absolutely gratuitous and not borne out by the evidence as far as disclosed by the argument of counsel or the ability of the committee to read the same.

We conclude, as a result of the conclusions of the committee, that it was the judgment of the majority to disfranchise all the voters who are so unfortunate as to be compelled to reside in the eastern or Democratic portion of the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri. Certain it is that by the report of this committee, which excludes 41 of these precincts from the count, that all of the voters in these 41 precincts of the Twelfth Congressional district are disfranchised and excluded from participation in their constitutional privileges by this action.

The report of the majority of the committee in its opening paragraphs seems to give undue prominence to the election contest of Horton v. Butler in the former session of this Congress, in which both contestant and contestee were unseated because of fraud on the part of both Democrats and Republicans in the election of 1900 in that district.

The report in that case said:

"It appears that about 5,000 votes were cast for the contestee and about 2,000 for the contestant under names and addresses which a careful canvass could not discover as representing actual residents. We can not apply one rule of inference to one side and refuse to apply it to the other side. Nor can we, when so many votes apparently tainted with fraud are involved, determine that he who has least benefited by them shall be declared elected.

"In so far as the force of this particular item of testimony is alone considered, unaffected by the other evidence in the case, it would appear that the iniquity of the Republican managers differed from that of the Democratic managers only in degree."

On the face of the returns at the election of 1900 Mr. Butler had a majority of 3,553.

At the election for the short term now contested he had on the face of the returns, in the same district, a majority of 6,293.

Phases of this contest, and the report of the majority of the committee herein filed, impels the conclusion that a lack of judicial inquiry has ensued.

A speed is invoked that forestalls a due consideration of the mass of evidence and exhibits.

A partisanship seems to have usurped the place of reason and calm judicial inquiry.

A partisan for contestant, subordinating the justice of the case, considered from the standpoint of judicial and ethical inquiry, can find in partisanship his refuge in the position that it is a covert if not an open partisan attempt dexterously to sustain a policy conceived from and growing out of the unseating of the present contestee in the last session.

This policy preconceived is not chargeable to the House membership, nor to members of any election committee thereof.

That it exists is apparent. It is elaborate enough to not only extend at this time to a sustaining of the report in the last contest from this district settled in the last session but goes to the next Congress, and herein is found the reasons for the special reference in the report to both.

A change in this pre-thought-out policy has not been wrought by the designers of it or by the unexpected election of the contestee by a majority of some thousands. It needs but a casual reading of the present report to show the lines and systems, the arguments and reasons, and the salient points in the former report, and the promoters of the plan will hope for the same characteristics in the next.

In the last contest Elections Committee No. 1 considered it; in this it is shifted to Elections Committee No. 2. This may be urged as evidence of supreme fairness. The whole proceeding bears the characteristics so patent and the earmarks so plain as to free it from the element of fairness which this reference would bear, and show the contrary to have been the hope, and such hope, it has turned out, was not in vain.

The report now made, the procedure leading up to it, the failure to give time for consideration of the case, and the failure to give judicial determination to it in a manner that would give a judicial weight to the report, all show procedure and conclusions that the minority can not subscribe to or ask the House of Representatives to indorse.

The members of the minority of the committee will not stultify themselves by sanctioning conclusions that no one could by a judicial inquiry, within the time allotted, draw from the mass of conflicting evidence presented.

The contestant was not in an advantageous position as representing the Republican party on the ballot.

All Republican candidates in St. Louis suffered by the internecine factional wars in the Republican organization and party. The result of this internal and party disorganization is shown by the election returns, not only of all the Republican candidates for Congress, but of all Republican candidates.

It resulted to that party in tumults and disorders, appeals to courts and conflicting party organizations, decisions by courts and party organizations repudiated and spurned; it led to criminations and recriminations, and resulted in chaos not unlike that mentioned in the first chapter of Genesis.

This is amply shown by the open revolt by Republicans of high standing, and the record shows scores of leading representative Republicans who were willing to testify to such conditions. As bearing on the ability of the contestant as a vote getter these fact are important. He did not run as a candidate for the long term, but was vouchsafed a scant three months of service involved in the short time.

Here are some of the evidences of internal disorder:

The contestant filed a petition of voters to appear as a candidate for the short term. A like petition was filed by Loffhagen for the long term and by Reynolds for the long term, and by him for the short term.

A petition from the central committee was filed by Reynolds for the long term and for the short term.

A convention nominated Reynolds for the short and long term.

A minority from this convention nominated contestant for the short term and Loffhagen for the long term.

Loffhagen withdrew for the long term and Reynolds withdrew for the short term. Here we have the manifold and conflicting efforts of the contestant to get on the ticket, which was the fruit of Republican disorder.

The contestant was not a resident of his district, but registered and voted from his place of business in the district in which he was a candidate. His eligibility to run in the district is not questioned, but his power as a vote getter is questioned.

His right to run in the manner he did as a representative of the Republican party on the ballot is deemed as a matter of law, and this position is supported by the best authority.

By the action of the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the last session the seat was declared vacant. In effect, it was to say to the parties:

"We disfranchise you for the present in the Twelfth district and set aside the rights of the State of Missouri, but at the coming election a choice can be made."

With a knowledge that appeal to the courts would deny the right of the contestant here to be placed on the ballot as a candidate, with thoughts that this would result from an appeal to the courts and with time fully adequate to present it to the court, the contestee magnanimously waived his right and the advantage thus offered, and did not take this step, and expressly waived it in the examination of witnesses and before the committee, so that this result of the election could be solved by the legitimate voters of the district, unhampered by anything that would prevent a fair consideration and decision.

Any evidence of fraud, violence, or irregularities in any precinct, as shown by the sworn evidence, is not on a fair construction more than the usual results incident to large cities and congested population of the character incident to localities in such cities.

By the report of the former contest against the sitting member these frauds were asserted against the partisans of both parties to the contest, and in this contest the record shows that what fraud or irregularity there was in different precincts was chargeable to both parties.

In some precincts the anomalous condition is presented that Republican candidates for justice of the peace, as well as those for constable, subordinated the Republican candidate for Congress to their own ambitions to serve the people as justice of the peace or constable in these courts.

In no way does the record show, nor does the majority of the committee claim, that Mr. Butler was in any way connected with any fraud, irregularity, or violence, or responsible for it.

The rule that where pure ballots can be separated from those tainted by fraud the former should be counted has not been pursued by the majority of the committee, but to seat the contestant they have rejected in a wholesale manner all the ballots in many precincts, thus depriving the legal voters of their rights, and thus depriving them as citizens of the right to have their ballots counted.

The inevitable conclusion follows that the majority of the committee were willing to accept results on the authority of partisans of contestant who formulated reports and data in his behalf, biased as they were in their interest in Mr. Butler's loss of a seat.

The most charitable judgment, which falls far short of giving any integrity to the report of the majority of the committee, is found in that they do not care to go through the long and laborious task of finding the truth for themselves and separating the legal from the illegal ballots, but are content to accept the result on the authority of partisan leaders for the contestant, for which work the majority may not have had the time, possibly no inclination.

Their action in failing to consider all the evidence in a careful and orderly manner does not give dignity to their report or place upon it that seal of accuracy and integrity that commends it to a judicial mind or that should commend it to the House of Representatives.

A brief time was given to the agents of contestee to prepare data, which was forthcoming within the time allotted, for the use of the committee and bearing upon vital points in the case, but the report was practically completed long before the time that the data were to be furnished to the committee, and this action does not bear the light of day except upon the theory of foreclosure, above referred to.

The hearings before the committee were all open; no subcommittee was appointed to consider any branch or feature of the case, save, however, that which subsequent experience has fully proven, that the preconceived purpose of unseating the contestee had dominated all the proceedings without regard to that fair and judicial determination that should characterize a committee having for its functions judicial inquiry.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] did not sign the report of the majority. He was absent during all the hearings of the case, and his most important public duties in other lines is ample excuse for his nonattendance, and the fact of his absence is only mentioned to show that this report does not bear his judicial indorsement.

Mr. DWIGHT, New York, was absent from all the meetings and deliberations of the committee while the committee was engaged in open session, and as this time involved all the time up to within two hours of the presentation of the report to the House, it can be stated that his absence was continuous till such last meeting. His absence is properly excused by his illness, and the facts are mentioned only to show with what sanctity the report comes to this House.

The other seven members of the committee, including three Democrats, were constant in their attendance, and the minority feel constrained to say that these members attended, giving their best thought and time to the consideration of the case, but that, with a possible exception or two, the majority members of the committee were convinced that within the time allotted no safe and judicial consideration could be given to the complex and important case. These conclusions are not unreasonable.

The minority members of the committee did not attend the last meeting of the committee, and the excuse for that is found in the general and undeniable rumor of a fact that the dominant force had prejudged the case, had determined to report adversely to the contestee, and that no sufficient time would be given the minority to present their views on the case unless that minority at once began to prepare those views, which they have continuously and laboriously since that time been striving to do, and at this hour of 4.30 they have but thirty minutes more under the order of the House and only have slender hopes, with all this industry, of accomplishing the task.

The printed evidence reached the committee in sections, commencing February 16, and the final printing of the evidence was completed February 23. It embraces 2,400 pages, and was accompanied by 1,200 pounds of exhibits. The argument consumed twelve hours, and continued from February 16 to the 21st. These arguments were taken by reporters and were to be printed for the use of the committee.

These apparent facilities for the fair and judicial determination of the case were foreclosed by the early report to the House on the 25th of February, not to speak of them as a work of transparent supererogation in view of the prearranged intent that is proven by subsequent events and which has characterized acts in the case since the advent of the contestant and his partisan, coming fresh from the close of the evidence at St. Louis on January 31.

It is not intended to say that the parties to this contest did not do all they could to present evidence to Congress, though Congress, by a close vote, declined to send a subcommittee to St. Louis to separate the wheat from the chaff and to hear the evidence in the first instance. The parties introduced a large mass of evidence—too much, indeed, for a fair consideration of the case upon its merits this session—and within that limited time brought 2,300 pages; and by a system of taking evidence to secure what was thought to be needed, as high as eight notaries were engaged at the same time in taking the examination.

In this fact we find more dereliction on the part of the majority of the committee in attempting to pass judicially upon this evidence without reading it or any major part of it, which is not possible in the time, than we complain of the parties for not having sufficient evidence on which to determine the case.

The so-called Nesbit law, which was adopted in 1899, and which provides election machinery applicable to the city of St. Louis only, comes in for a general discussion and disapprobation by the report of the majority, while in the argument before the committee there was practically nothing said by counsel for the contestant against the integrity and the fairness of the Nesbit law. This is another bit of fancy carpentry, intended to dovetail the report of this committee into the report of Committee on Elections No. 1, in the Horton-Butler contest in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Complaint is made in the report that prior to the adoption of the law, in 1898, this district elected a Republican Congressman by a majority of 2,321, but since the adoption of the law, in 1900 and 1902, Democratic majorities have been returned. The majority here carefully refrains from saying anything concerning the disunited condition of the Democratic party upon the financial issue in 1893 and 1898, and their practical unity since that time.

Members of Congress who were returned to this House by majorities ranging up in the thousands, and retired from the present Congress by like majorities, will be visibly moved by the convincing logic and the eloquence of this statement contained in the report of the majority. It is true that the Republican party carried this district in 1896 and in 1898, and the evidence shows that only one other time in twenty-five years did they carry it.

It has been demonstrated in the argument in this case that every feature of what is known as the Nesbit law, which was criticised by the majority of the Committee on Elections No. 1 in their report, first session of this Congress, has been absolutely cured by legislation which was in force at the time of this election. The Committee on Elections No. 1 charged that the chief elements of weakness in the Nesbit law might be summarized as follows:

"(1) The entire election machinery is in the hands of three election commissioners appointed by the governor, of whom one must be politically opposed to the governor. The act of the majority is the act of the board.

"(2) The election commissioners must appoint a deputy election commissioner, who is 'vested with all the powers and duties of the commissioners during their absence, sickness, or inability to perform their duties.'

"With a complacent or corrupt majority the minority member might as well take a journey to the North Pole as to attempt to take any efficient part in the management of the election machinery.

"(3) Under the provisions of section 7226 practically all of the city registration occurs at the office of the election commissioners. A very small percentage is conducted before the precinct registration boards.

"The wit of man has not yet devised a larger opportunity for fraudulent registration than this.

"(4) The board of election commissioners—which, if need be, is the deputy commissioner—appoints four judges of election and two clerks.

"'Two of said judges and one of said clerks of election shall belong to and be members of the party of opposite politics to the other two judges and clerks.'

"This provision seems to be fair and innocent. But the difficulty about it is that the board of election commissioners, or their conveniently empowered deputy, are the judges, from whose judgment there is no appeal as to the political qualifications of the judges and clerks whom they select."

In other words, the two salient objections to the Nesbitt law which that committee found in its report were, first, that clause which authorized the appointment of a deputy election commissioner and the investiture in him of the powers of the entire board; and secondly, that feature which made them the absolute judge or tribunal for deciding the Republicanism or non-Republicanism of the man appointed to act for the Republican party.

The first amendment absolutely abolished the power to appoint a deputy election commissioner. That power seemed to give most annoyance to the committee when the matter came up before. That feature of the law was absolutely eliminated by the legislation of 1901. The further complaint was that the law lacked an element of fairness in that the judges of the opposite party might be other than members of that party.

The amendment of 1901 provided that there should be two judges and one of the clerks on the precinct election board members of the party which is next in numbers to the one that elects the governor—that is, the Republican party. Thus the amendments of 1901 answered every contention for fairness of the majority of the Committee on Elections No. 1.

We quote the old law:

"Two of said judges and one of said clerks of election shall belong to and be members of the party of opposite politics to the other two judges and clerk."

We quote the new law. It is section 7229:

"SEC. 7229. Judges and clerks to be selected—Qualifications.—Such board of election commissioners shall as early as practicable prior to the first city or State election after this act becomes a law select and choose four electors as judges of election for each precinct in such city; they must be citizens of the United States, and entitled to vote in such precinct at the next election; must be men of good repute and character; be of good understanding and capable; they must reside in the ward in which the precinct for which they are selected to act is situated, and not hold any office or employment under the United States, the State of Missouri, or the city in which such election is held, and not be candidates for any office at the next ensuing election; two clerks of election for each precinct shall also be selected within the same time by such commissioners, who shall possess the same qualifications as the judges aforesaid.

"Before entering upon the duties of their offices, each judge and clerk so appointed shall take and subscribe to like oath as that taken and subscribed by the election commissioners and file the same in the office of the election commissioners. Said judges and clerks shall be appointed for a term ending thirty days prior to the next State election after the election at which they were appointed to serve, and shall, during said term, serve as judges and clerks at all special, local, or municipal elections in such cities; where a vacancy in the office of judge or clerk shall occur from any cause, said commissioners shall make an appointment as herein provided to fill such vacancy.

"Two of said judges and one of said clerks of election shall belong to, and be members of, the political party which, at the last general State election for State officers, polled the highest number of votes for governor, and two of said judges and one of said clerks of election shall belong to, and be members of, the political party which, at said last State election, polled the next highest number of votes for governor; and the names of two of said judges and one of said clerks shall be designated by the election commissioner or commissioners belonging to and a member or members of the same political party as such judges and clerks, subject to ratification by the board of election commissioners, but said board of election commissioners shall accord to each of the aforesaid political parties equal representation in the appointment of judges and clerks.

"If any person holding the position of judge or clerk of election is found not to possess all qualifications prescribed in this section, or if any such judge or clerk shall be guilty of neglecting the duties of the place, or be guilty of any official misconduct, then such person shall be removed from office by the commissioners, and any such vacancy shall be immediately filled by the appointment of a suitable person to such place, who shall be selected and appointed as this section provides."

Can there be devised a more thoroughly safeguarded provision than that? To say that this provision is fair and to attack the results attained under it is to attack the administration, the integrity, the honesty, the patriotism of the government of the State of Missouri.

Not to be accused of lacking the boldness which piratic partisanship demands of its devotees, the majority of this committee says:

"The election machinery of the whole city is placed under the control of the board of election commissioners, composed of three members appointed by the governor for a term of four years. The law does indeed provide that one of said commissioners shall be a member of and belong to the leading party politically opposed to that to which the governor belongs. Nevertheless, he is selected by the governor and not likely to be very antagonistic to the party whose governor confers upon him the position."

Could desperation devise a more bitter, a more cruel, a more venomous, a more cold, heartless, not to say cowardly, attack upon the Republican commissioner of elections of the city of St. Louis, who is at the present time Mr. Louis P. Aloe, who, according to the evidence taken in this case, is a man of the highest standing as a man and as a Republican—the president of the Merchants' League Republican Club in the city of St. Louis at the time of his appointment, the most powerful Republican organization west of the Alleghenies Mountains; formerly president of the League of Republican Clubs of the State of Missouri, and who, less than two weeks ago, was selected and presided as toastmaster over the annual banquet of the League of Republican Clubs of Missouri.

As to the administration of this law, concerning the appointment of Republican judges and clerks, the minority desires to direct the attention of the House to the testimony of James McCaffery, chairman of the board of election commissioners.

APPOINTMENT OF REPUBLICAN JUDGES AND CLERKS.

James McCaffery, chairman of the board of election commissioners:

Direct examination by Mr. Walsh (p. 1535):

"Q. Did you, as a member of the board of election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, direct, or order, or appoint the judges and clerks to act November 4, 1902?

"A. Never appointed a single clerk or judge.

"Q. Were they appointed under your direction?

Page 1536:

"Q. How are they appointed or how do they become clerks and judges?

"A. By the board of election commissioners as a board.

"Q. And you are a member of that board?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And president of that board as well?

"A. Chairman; yes, sir.

"Q. What is the method, or what was the method, used with reference to the appointment of judges and clerks for the Republican and Democratic parties for the election which was held on November 4, 1902?

"A. The judges and clerks are recommended by the Democratic central committee for the Democrats and by the Republican central committee for the Republicans—the Republicans are recommended by the Republican central committee and appointed by the Republican member of the board of election commissioners, subject to the approval of the board of election commissioners.

"Q. So that all the judges and clerks who officiated at the election on November 4 were recommended to your board by the committeemen of the various wards in which they served?

"A. Yes; without any exception whatsoever."

Also testimony of John M. Wood, member board of election commissioners.

Direct examination by Mr. Walsh (pp. 1549 and 1550):

"Q. Do you, as a member of the board of election commissioners, assist in the appointment of the judges and clerks who acted at the election held November 4, 1902, in this city?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Will you state the method under which those judges and clerks were appointed?

"A. Yes, sir; they were nominated by the committees of the two leading parties, to wit, the Republican and the Democratic parties. In other words, as the statutes provide, the committeemen of each of those parties submitted to us a list of judges and clerks for the election, and in each instance, unless objection was made, or there was some evidence furnished us, or we had of own knowledge information that the parties whose names were suggested were incompetent or otherwise unfit, we followed the recommendations of the committees and selected judges and clerks out of the lists submitted.

"Q. Where any one of the judges and clerks were discovered to be unfit, what method did you pursue for the purpose of filling the office vacated under those circumstances?

"A. We selected another man from the same list. The statute provides that they shall submit a number of names; and when one man was rejected we picked another from the same list of the same party. Wherever we refused to accept the man who had been nominated by one side or the other we substitutad in his place another one from the same list.

"Q. But all of those appointments which were made by your board—you selected as representative of the various parties only those who were suggested to you by the committeemen of the various parties?

"A. Yes, sir; and my recollection at this time is that out of all of the names suggested there were very few—perhaps as many as ten—that were rejected.

"Q. Was there any controversy between the members of the board on this question?

"A. No, sir.

"Your board always met with the two Democratic and one Republican member?

"A. Yes, sir. We never have, so far as I can recollect, transacted any business except a representative of both parties was present. Well, perhaps once in a while—I don't now recollect of an instance, but I know so far as unimportant matters, formal matters, such as the giving an order to get blanks, or something of that kind, where the Republican member of the committee said he was busy and for the other members to attend to that, or when the Democratic member said he could not be present, and for the Republican and the other member to do it—I think possibly that may have happened once or twice during the past year.

"Q. That was in connection with ordinary routine matters?

"A. Yes, sir; altogether.

"Q. And had no direct bearing on these elections?

"A. Nothing bearing on the elections at all. Regarding the appointment of clerks and everything else we did, the full board was always present on that.

"Q. Isn't it a fact in connection with the appointment of the Republican judges and clerks that that matter was left practically and entirely in the hands of the Republican member of the board?

"A. Yes, sir; altogether."

And, further, to the testimony of Charles Claudius (p. 1509-1510), who was the chief Republican clerk under the immediate orders of the Republican election commissioner.

"Direct examination by Mr. WALSH:

"Q. State your name and address.

"A. Charles Claudius; 4630 Nebraska avenue.

"Q. What official position did you hold November 4, 1902?

"A. Assistant in the election commissioner's office.

"Q. What party were you affiliated with?

"A. Republican.

"Q. Were you there as appointee of the Republicans?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. In that capacity did you receive the communications from the various committeemen as to the appointments for the officials of your party to be placed in the polling places on election day, November 4, 1902?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, have you any records of the official communications you received?

"A. Mr. Aloe has them; I turned them over to him.

"Q. Who is Mr. Aloe?

"A. The Republican election commissioner.

"Q. Can you recollect who communicated with you as to the appointment of judges and clerks in the Fourth Ward?

"A. In the Fourth Ward? That was Judge Walker, I think.

"Q. Robert Walker?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Were all the appointments for the Republican party for judges and clerks in the Fourth Ward made at the suggestion of Robert Walker?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, who did you receive a communication from from the Fifth Ward with reference to these matters?

"A. Joseph Schuler.

"Q. He is the committeeman of the Fifth Ward?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. I want to ask you that question with reference to the Fourth Ward, Robert Walker.

"A. He is the Republican committeeman from the Fourth Ward."

Page 1510:

"Q. Who did you receive a communication from with regard to the appointment of judges and clerks for the Sixth Ward?

"A. John B. Owen.

"Q. The gentleman who has just testified?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And Mr. Owen represents the Republican party?

"A. Republican committeeman of the Sixth Ward.

"Q. Who did you receive a communication from with reference to the Twelfth Ward?

"A. Twelfth Ward? O. A. Alt.

"Q. He is what in the party?

"A. Republican committeeman.

"Q. Of the Twelfth Ward?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you receive a communication, also, from a representative of the Thirteenth Ward?

"A. From some attorney; I forget his name—William H. Ludwig.

"Q. He was what in the party?

"A. Republican central committeeman.

"Q. For what ward?

"A. Thirteenth Ward.

"Q. Who did you receive communications from for the Fourteenth Ward with reference to the judges and clerks?

"A. Judge Cramer, Sigmund.

"Q. Who and what is he?

"A. Republican committeeman of the Fourteenth Ward.

"Q. Now, for the Fifteenth Ward, who furnished the list of judges and clerks for the Republican party?

"A. Fifteenth Ward?

"Q. Slingman, wasn't it?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Who and what was he in the Republican party?

"A. Republican committeeman of the Fifteenth Ward.

"Q. Who gave you the information from the Twentieth Ward?

"A. Twentieth? Nat Goldstein.

"Q. Who and what is he?

"A. Republican committeeman.

"Q. For the Twentieth Ward?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Whom from the Twenty-first Ward?

"A. Charlie Day.

"Q. Who and what is he?

"A. Hold up; that is wrong. The Twenty-first? I don't remember now.

"Q. Who gave you information from the Twenty-second Ward?

"A. Charlie Day.

"Q. Who and what is he?

"A. He is Republican central committeeman.

"Q. And from the Twenty-third Ward?
"A. Well, that was Pat Clark and Patty Regan.
"Q. Who is Pat Clark?
"A. A Republican central committeeman of that ward.
"Q. And who is Patty Reagan?
"A. He was running for justice of the peace.
"Q. He was the candidate for justice in the Twenty-third Ward?
"A. In the Twenty-third; yes, sir.
"Q. What position does he hold?
"A. Assistant in the election commissioners' office.
"Q. Representing what party?
"A. Republican.
"Q. What party was he a candidate for? On what ticket?
"A. Republican.
"Q. How about the Twenty-fourth Ward?
"A. That was furnished by Blake and Fred Smith.
"Q. Who is Blake?
"A. Chairman of the Republican city committee.
"Q. Who is Fred Smith?
"A. He was the Republican candidate for sheriff.
"Q. And from the Twenty-fifth Ward?
"A. George P. Weinbrenner.
"Q. What is he?
"A. Republican committeeman.
"Q. Now from the Twenty-eighth?
"A. That was furnished by Bonner.
"Q. Who and what is he?
"A. Republican committeeman.
"Q. Now, Mr. Weinbrenner is also the jury commissioner appointed by the Republican circuit judges?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. He still holds that office?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. All of these committeemen whom you have named, they are all Republican representative members of the city organization?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Have you been able to recall the name of the committeeman from the Twenty-first?
"A. I believe it is Dr. Pritchett; I am not sure.
"Q. If it is Dr. Pritchett—he is the committeeman from that ward—do you know whether or not he is the one who furnished the names of the judges and clerks who were to act as such November 4, 1902?
"A. He did.
"Q. Now, were there any judges or clerks appointed to represent the Republican party who were not voters or appointed by the various committeemen whom you have named in the Twelfth Congressional district?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. These appointments were all made at the suggestion of the committeemen or under their indorsement?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Now, if there were any changes made in any of the judges or clerks, by whom were these changes made in these various wards?
"A. The committeeman was notified, and he sent down a letter to the effect, with his signature attached to it.
"Q. And these appointments or changes were only made under these circumstances?
"A. Yes, sir."

Page 1511:

"Q. Judge Robert Walker, of the Fourth Ward, was particularly active in securing the appointment of his judges and clerks?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. That was true also of Pat Regan in the Twenty-third?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And Mr. Slingman in the Fifteenth?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. These gentlemen made it their business to secure their own appointees?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Mr. Regan is now engaged in the same position which you occupied prior or at the time of election, 1902?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You succeeded Mr. Regan in that position when he became a candidate?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. So he had as much of a familiarity with the workings of the office of the election commissioners as you have possessed and acquired by being a member of the board of election commissioners' staff?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Now, do you know how many members of this committee, or how many of these committeemen, were members of the city central committee of the Republican party prior to the primaries of October, 1902?
"A. Five, I believe—four.
"Q. Four? Will you name these four?
"A. John B. Owen, Louis Alt, Sligman, and Weinbrenner—I believe Pat Clark was, but I am not sure."

The majority of the committee say the voters in the several election precincts are not permitted to select their own judges, inspectors, and clerks of election, but these three election commissioners appointed by the governor are authorized to select for each polling place four judges and two clerks of election. It is now provided that two of the judges and one of the clerks shall be designated "by the minority commissioner. It requires, however, the concurrence of at least one of the majority commissioners to make this designation effective."

Does this majority of this committee intend to convulse the House with mirth when it suggests that the voters in the several election precincts are not permitted to select their own judges, inspectors, and clerks of election, and this report from a committee of the party that attempted to pass the force bill; and this report from a committee whose chairman comes from Pennsylvania?

The history of New York election laws under Republican administrations brightens the jewel of consistency in the crown which should be presented to the chairman who submitted this report.

The report sneeringly suggests that the concurrence of at least one of the majority of the election commissioners must make the "designation effective." Can the majority point out one syllable of evidence in the whole record to show any attempt upon the part of the Democratic members of the board of election commissioners to interfere in the selection of the Republican judges and clerks provided for each precinct?

On page 1536 the chairman of the board of election commissioners is asked by the attorney for the contestant:

"Q. What is the method or what was the method used with reference to the appointment of judges and clerks for the Republican and Democratic parties for the election which was held on November 4, 1902?
"A. The judges and clerks are recommended by the Democratic central committee for the Democrats, and by the Republican central committee for the Republicans. The Republicans are recommended by the Republican central committee and appointed by the Republican member of the board of election commissioners, subject to the approval of the board of election commissioners.
"Q. So that all the judges and clerks who officiated at the election on November 4 were recommended to your board by the committeemen of the various wards in which they served?
"A. Yes; without any exception whatsoever."

The next feature of this remarkable report of the majority of this committee is devoted entirely to an attack upon the registration in this Congressional district. A contemplation of the method by which a basis for this attack was laid in the proof will also appeal with great eloquence to this House as a demonstration of the character of fairness and judicial procedure which characterizes the effort to railroad Mr. Butler out of this House from the beginning of these proceedings to the end.

It is stated in this report that by far the greater number of names upon the official register were placed there at the board of election commissioners' office rather than at the various precinct polling places on the day regularly appointed by law for personal registration in the precinct. Says the report:

"A voter may upon a certain day register in the precinct in which he lives, but except upon that day registration must be made outside of the precinct, and in many cases outside of the Congressional district, at the office of the central board of election commissioners."

In this case the said office of the central board of election commissioners is in the very heart of the Twelfth Congressional district.

Perhaps in the hurry to secure the salary of a member of Congress for the contestant whom they believe to have been elected in this case they forgot the fact that the office of the central board of election commissioners is in the heart of this "very worst" portion of the city of St. Louis, as they have characterized it.

Says the report:

"SEC. 7238. Judges shall sign registry—registry to be sent to commissioners—commissioners to proceed—how lists public records.

"At the end of the last session provided for the said board of registration and said clerk shall compare and correct the registers aforesaid and make them correspond and agree; and said judges shall then, immediately following the last name on each page of the register, sign their names so that no other name can be added without discovery, and shall return the two registers to the possession of the election commissioners; thereupon the said commissioners shall at once cause copies to be made of such registers, of all the names upon the same, with the address, and arranged according to the streets, avenues, or alleys, commencing with the lowest number and arranging the same in order according to street numbers, and shall then cause such precinct register, under such arrangement, to be printed in sufficient numbers to meet all demands, and upon application a copy of the same shall be given to any person in such precinct. Said registers in the office of the election commissioners shall be public records and open to public inspection."

"Duly authenticated copies of all these printed precinct registers are found in the testimony of this case."

Upon this statement in the report is based all the further conclusions respecting fraud as alleged to have been developed by what was called the Owen scheme of returned registered letters. This Owen scheme was introduced in evidence on the last day of the five days of rebuttal allotted under the resolution of the House above set forth to the contestant for taking testimony in rebuttal of the testimony introduced by the contestee in the twenty days preceding.

It is true that the informative sheets referred to in section 7238 of the law above referred to were introduced in evidence in chief by the contestant, but the materiality of such testimony could not have appeared to any reasonable mind without the supplementary testimony of Mr. Owen and his scheme of exhibits until they were introduced. Any court, yea, even the court of a justice of the peace, would not have allowed the testimony of Mr. Owen and his scheme of registered letters and self-manipulated tabulation sheets to have been introduced in evidence without an opportunity for contradiction or full cross-examination by the contestee. To the introduction of this testimony the contestee registered all legal and possible objections.

The lists above referred to, which are marked "Exhibit C, of January 3, 1903, on the part of the contestant," and are made a part of the record in this case, were introduced on January 3, 1903, with the testimony of Louis P. Aloe, which appears on page 289 of the record. Mr. Aloe identified them as official lists of the registered voters of the various precincts, as issued by the election commissioners' office for the convenience of voters—official, however, only, as he afterwards stated, in the sense that they were issued by the election commissioners' office. He states that these sheets were printed from the verification lists which are prepared by the judges and clerks of election in the various precincts, as provided for by section 7233, which is as follows:

"SEC. 7233. Verification lists—challenges.—The election commissioners shall prepare and furnish to the board of registration in each precinct two blank books, to be known as 'verification lists,' each page to be ruled into columns and contain pages sufficient for each street, avenue, and alley in the precinct. During the progress of registration, or immediately thereafter, the clerks of said board shall transfer all the names upon the register to the left-hand pages of such 'verification lists,' arranging them according to the street, avenues, alleys, or courts, beginning with the lowest residence number and placing them numerically, as nearly as possible, from the lowest up to the highest number. They shall first write the name of such street, avenue, alley, or court at the top of the second column and then proceed to transfer the registered names to the pages of such 'verification lists,' headed 'Registered names,' according to the street number, as above indicated.

"If, during either day of registration, a registered voter of the ward shall come before the board of registry and make oath that he believes that any particular person upon such registry is not a qualified voter, such fact shall be noted, and after the completion of such 'verification lists' such board or one of said judges shall make a cross or check mark in ink opposite such name upon each of said 'verification lists.' If such judges shall, however, know that any person so complained of is a qualified voter, and shall believe that such complaint was only made to vex and harass such qualified voter, then such cross or checked mark shall not be put upon such lists. Said board of registration shall, before 8 o'clock on the following day, return said 'verification lists' to the office of such election commissioners." (New section.)

The above section is contained in the law of 1895 and is no part of the much-abused Nesbitt law.

It will be seen that these registration sheets, upon which the majority of the committee rests so much of their case, can not be said to have special verity or genuineness of character to be admitted as evidence of the actual legal registration in any court in the United States. It is not suggested that they have the color of verity in any degree, such as would examined copies or certified copies of the registration books.

They are not copies of the registration books. They are not even copies of copies of the registration books, but they are arranged from verification-lists, which verification lists are made up by taking the names of the registered voters from the registration books and arranging them by streets, avenues, and alleys, commencing with the lowest street number of any voter registered from any street, etc.

As to the absolute unreliability of these registration lists, upon which the whole case of the contestant is founded, we have but to refer to the testimony of Louis P. Aloe, a Republican member of the board of election commissioners, contained on pages 289 and 290 of the printed record:

Page 289:

"Cross-examination by Mr. FROMBERG:

"Q. I will ask you, Mr. Aloe, whether or not Exhibit C contains the names of all the duly qualified voters of each precinct of the Twelfth Congressional district?

"A. I should say not.

"Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that names appear upon the registration books in various precincts of persons who are entitled to vote and whose names do not appear in Exhibit C?

"(Objected to as calling for a conclusion of the witness on a question of law.)

"Mr. FROMBERG. I ask of his own knowledge.

"A. I don't know that of my own knowledge. I should say it is quite likely.

"Q. In your opinion does that condition prevail?

"(Objected to as indefinite, irrelevant, and immaterial.)

"Q. I am asking you in your capacity of election commissioner.

"A. I would answer that by stating that it is most likely that a great many of those sheets are incorrect.

"Q. A great many of those sheets are incorrect?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. When you say a great many of those sheets are incorrect, what do you mean?

"A. Well, I mean this—that those sheets are published by us from the verification books prepared by the clerks acting in the precincts on a board of revision. They are an exact facsimile of the verification books as turned in to the board of election commissioners by the judges and clerks.

"Q. Then, how do you account for the surplusage of names of duly qualified voters appearing upon the registration books of various precincts?

"A. Incompetency upon the part of clerks as well as judges.

"Q. That is one of the conditions that exists?

"A. It does exist; yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know anything about the first precinct of the Twenty-second Ward, of the variances there between the lists and the registration books?

"A. Nothing to my knowledge."

* * * * * * *

"Mr. FROMBERG. What is the reason that these lists are prepared—uttered—as my friend Richey says?

"A. The purpose of the publication of the registration is generally understood to be for the guidance, first, of the—I should take it—the workers, to permit them to ascertain who is qualified to vote, and also for the benefit of citizens at large, that they may ascertain in advance that they are qualified.

"Q. But that instrument is not absolutely conclusive?

"A. It is not.

"Mr. RICHEY. Isn't it true that some of those sheets were uttered only the day before the election?

"A. That is true, yes, in several precincts of the Fourth Ward. On Sunday, two days prior to the election, the revision was still going on. They didn't go to the printers until late that particular Sunday afternoon. It is fair to presume that they didn't go to press until the day before the election."

We call the attention of the House specifically to the statement of the witness on page 1466, where the same witness states that the printed list (referring to the list in evidence) is the official printed list:

"It is not the official list, however, by which it can be determined whether or not a man is in fact a qualified voter."

On page 1466 the witness was asked:

"Q. In making the affidavit of the character which Mr. Conrad has made there, would your method be to depend on these printed lists for the purpose of giving information or on the original registration?

"A. Why, I would pay no attention to anything but the official register."

This testimony is corroborated by the testimony of John H. Stansberry, an assistant in the election commissioners' office, page 1454, as follows:

"Q. Are there any proofs submitted to the board of election commissioners of those lists, so that they can be compared with your books?

"A. None whatever.

"Q. There is never any verification, so far as this particular book is concerned, for the printed lists?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. The book is the official record of the individual voters of that precinct?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And the printed list can not be an official record under any circumstances, can it?

"A. Never so considered as an official record.

"Q. I believe you have stated that there has been no comparison of the printed list with the registration book?

"A. No, sir; never has been.

"Q. There are no proofs ever sent from the printers to you before you get your sheets?

"A. No, sir."

Also the testimony of Louis Kunz, secretary of the board of election commissioners, on pages 1554 and 1555:

"Direct examination by Mr. WALSH:

"Q. Did you as the secretary of the board arrange for the printing of the lists of names which were given out after?

"A. The board arranged for the printing of those lists.

"Q. Do you recollect on what day the copy was given to the printers?

"A. Saturday. Started in on Monday. Started to send them down to the printers on the 20th of October. The last day of revision was on the 18th, that was Saturday, and some of the books came in Sunday, and some came in Monday, and some came in Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Q. Was that immediately after the books were returned to you that you forwarded them to the printer?

"A. Yes, sir

"Q. Now, did you subsequently take the printed lists received from the printers—did you get any printers' proof?

"A. We did not.

"Q. Did you ever at any time take those printers' lists and compare them with the registration books?

"A. We did not.

"Q. Do you know whether those printed lists were absolutely correct as to the registered voters in the various precincts?

"A. We found out since that they were not correct.

"Q. Your effort had been to make them correct, had it?

"A. We made no effort. We sent the books as made up by the clerks to the printer.

"Q. Well, it was your intention to get the lists correct—to get correct lists of the voters?

"A. Of the voters, yes, sir.

"Q. And you failed to do that?

"A. Well——

"Q. That was through no fault of the election board, so far as you know?

"A. Not a bit.

"Q. And you did not subsequently make any comparisons with the registration books?

"A. None at all.

"Q. Now, is there any other official record of the voters, the registered voters, than the registration books?

"(Objected to as asking the witness to decide a question of law.)

"Mr. WALSH. I am asking for a question of facts. The register of the voters in the office of the board is the only correct register. That is the book in which the voter in each precinct who desires to vote registers his name, isn't it?

"A. It is.

"Q. That is a record which is open at all times to public inspection in the office of the election board, isn't it?

"A. Yes, sir; and which book the people vote from.

"Q. And if any person comes to the office of the board of election commissioners and desires to inspect those books, are they permitted to do so?

"A. They are.

"Q. Is there any method, or any means, or any effort made to prevent an absolutely free inspection of the registration books at all times, or any time between the hours of 9 a. m. and 5 p. m.?

"Mr. RICHEY. An effort made by whom?

"Mr. WALSH. By anybody.

"A. No, sir.

"Q. Can anyone inspect those books who desires?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Anyone who calls at the office of the board of election commissioners?

"A. Yes, sir; they are public records.

"Q. They are absolutely public records?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. With no limitations on an inspection?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. No fence or guards put around them; they are kept in a case, are they not?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And a request must be made to inspect them?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. They are not out where anyone can get hold of them, are they?

"A. No, sir; they are in a row of cases like any books are kept.

"Q. On application to the clerk in the office the books are presented?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And the only formality is an application for the book?

"A. Yes, sir; and while anyone is inspecting the book the clerk stands near to see that he does not strike off any names or tamper with the book.

"Q. To see that he does not tamper with the book in any way?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. The same method practically that is used in all places of record?

"A. Yes, sir."

The unreliability of these lists as evidence of the original registration books is further evidenced by the certificate of the secretary of the board of election commissioners, which is in evidence in this case, showing that 459 names of duly qualified voters were upon the registration book of Ward 22, precinct 1, whereas the informative sheet shows only 205, and also a certificate showing that in Ward 4, precinct 7, there were 670 names of duly qualified voters upon the original registration book in the office of the board of election commissioners, although these informative sheets show only 169.

But in spite of the above testimony, and in spite of the fact that these lists can not be said to be of any genuine import as vessels of truth as to what names were on the official registers, the majority of this committee, with all the mock solemnity of a Pooh Bah, declares that "duly authenticated copies of all these printed precinct registers are found in the testimony in this case." If these fugitive or informative sheets could be said to be "precinct registers" there might be some seriousness in the statement above quoted.

Taking these lists as a basis for operations, the majority proceeds to accept the contention of the contestant that because, forsooth, 25,179 registered letters were addressed to 25,179 persons whose names appear on these informative sheets which are alleged to represent the duly and regularly qualified voters in each of the 63 precincts which are in controversy in this case; because 12,608 of these registered letters were returned with indorsements thereon bearing the number of the letter carrier and notations indicating that the persons to whom these letters were addressed were not found at the address given; because 4,123 of these 12,608 voted at the last election, November 4, 1902, in the Twelfth Congressional district, and because 2,221 of these represent persons whose names did not appear in the directory of 1902, and for other reasons which the majority did not think important enough to state in the report, Mr. Butler should be deprived of his seat and Mr. Wagoner given a seat in this House.

The testimony is that this directory was canvassed for just one year previous to the time at which these letters were addressed to the persons whose names were on the printed lists.

On the face of each letter sent out is the direction of the sender to the mail carrier—"If not at this address, return at once."

The fact of this great variance, such as is exhibited by the certificate of the secretary of the board of election commissioners in the two instances above referred to, is seized upon as a veritable life saver by the majority of this committee in its attempt to extend a straw by which the contestant can survive the wave of popular disfavor which engulfed him in the election, and secure a seat for the remaining days of this session and the salary of a member of Congress.

"These exhibits," say the majority, "seem to present the highest evidence of fraud. No names could have been honestly placed upon the registration books after the public registry sheets were given out, except in a few cases of persons who, having been refused registration in their respective precincts, had appealed to the board of election commissioners.

"The testimony of the minority commissioner is to the effect that there were no more than 40 of such cases in the entire city of St. Louis, and in this Congressional district alone thousands of persons voted whose names were not upon the printed registration lists, and it now appears from the contestee's own testimony that in one of the precincts above mentioned less than half the names upon the registration books were down in the printed sheets, and in the other less than a fourth."

The majority brushes aside the probability, which is more than reasonable, that the variance is accounted for by the fact that these lists are made from copies of copies of the registration book by inexperienced men, selected for a day to perform the duty of judge and clerk of election. What a travesty it is for this majority to base its decision of this election contest upon the verity of these lists, prepared in such a manner. "But," say the majority, "these lists are official. They are ordered to be prepared by laws and they must be prepared under the supervision of the election commissioners."

Was it ever intended by the law which directed the preparation and distribution of these sheets that they should be used in a court or before a body of this kind as evidence? Had it been so intended, the legislature would doubtless have provided the means for verifying and proving these lists by a comparison or examination in connection with the original registration books, but the majority, waiving aside all thought of the fugitive character of these sheets, proceeds to say that the variance between the number on the registration books and the number on these sheets shows "premeditated and deliberate fraud."

The minority simply submits that this conclusion—for it is nothing else and has no basis for its foundation—is adopted only for the purpose of combating fact with epithet and adjective. The majority say that they are not prepared to accept the conclusions which the contestant asks them to draw from his testimony.

"In a given case a man may have been lawfully entitled to vote, although his name did not appear in the city directory published some months" [the fact is, one year] "before the election, and he was not found by the letter carrier a few weeks after the election" [six weeks after the election]. "We therefore decline to cast out any particular vote or votes upon that ground."

How gracious of this majority when it concludes not to throw out any particular vote or votes upon that ground. But upon this very ground, upon the facts alleged to be developed by the Owen scheme of the registered letter and the directory, the majority of the committee propose to throw out "not any particular vote or votes, but the whole poll in 41 precincts."

Can it be determined from the report that the majority of the committee has any other evidence upon which to throw out the whole poll in these 41 precincts except that developed by the Owen scheme of tabulating returned registered letters, the directory, etc.? During the hearing of the case members of the committee insisted that counsel for the contestant submit and the chairman of the committee directed that he submit to the committee citations of the pages in the record and the names of the witnesses in whose testimony could be found proof of specific acts of fraud in each particular precinct which might be regarded as sufficiently vicious to permeate the whole result and warrant the committee in rejecting the whole return.

This counsel promised the committee to do. This he has never done, as not even the majority of the committee will deny. Is it not a reasonable inference for the minority of this committee to draw that it was beyond his power to submit such specifications outside of a few isolated cases in the record where the minority and the contestee admit considerable fraud and irregularity existed and which the minority believe can be segregated from the whole return and can be, and should be, rejected in making up the correct return in the case?

The Fourth Ward, ninth precinct, is a territory dearly beloved by the majority of the committee in this case. This is a precinct in which lived a candidate for constable. Members of this House know that candidacies for minor offices, even the unimportant office of constable, ordinarily engender bitter conflicts of clan, and render the maintenance of strict order almost impossible at times during the conduct of the voting in certain localities.

As to this precinct, the minority desire to say that they have not had the opportunity to examine all the testimony referring to it, but that they believe from what they have read that they would be justified in excluding the whole poll of that precinct from the return. It seems that the same can be said about Ward 4, precinct 1. This is the precinct in which the testimony tends to show unusual activity in securing registration by one William Lee.

Ward 4, ninth precinct, is the precinct in which one Snake Kinney, who has afforded considerable ammunition for contestant and for the majority of this committee, was active.

The minority of this committee feel that in declaring that these two precincts should be excluded they are following the dictates of fairness and the evidence adduced. While the testimony of the witnesses for the contestant has been attacked by the contestee and demonstrated beyond doubt, in the opinion of the minority, to be faulty and unreliable, and the witnesses to be of the most disreputable character—such as negro river roustabouts and fence-house keepers on the levees—and unworthy of belief, still the contestee failed to meet their testimony with sufficient reliable contradictory evidence.

The next precinct in which the whole poll is excluded by the majority is precinct 10, Ward 15. We have had no positive evidence pointed out to us by counsel for the contestant of any irregularity in this precinct outside of what is shown in the Owen registered letter and directory tabulation. On the contrary, we find the positive testimony of Judge of Election Steve Pensa, page 1732, that the election in that precinct was conducted honestly, fairly, and in an orderly manner.

The next precinct excluded from the poll is precinct 6, Ward 15. No citation of positive evidence of irregularity was furnished the committee by contestant's counsel and we find positive evidence of Election Officials William S. Wellman (page 1741) and Otto Bell (page 1747) as to the absolute fairness and regular conduct of the election in that precinct.

The next precinct excluded from the poll is precinct 10, Ward 14. No citation of positive evidence of irregularity was furnished the committee by contestant's counsel, and we find positive evidence of Election Official Michael Noonan (page 1709) as to the absolute fairness and regular conduct of the election in that precinct.

The next precinct excluded from the poll is precinct 6, Ward 14. No citation of positive evidence of irregularity was furnished the committee by contestant's counsel, and we find positive evidence of Election Official Charles Flecke (who was subpœnaed by the contestant, though not examined) as to the absolute fairness and regular conduct of the election in that precinct.

Of the remaining precincts excluded by the majority, which are precinct 5, Ward 22; precinct 4, Ward 14; precinct 2, Ward 14; precinct 5, Ward 13; precinct 12, Ward 7; precinct 12, Ward 6; precinct 8, Ward 6; precinct 8, Ward 14; precinct 1, Ward 22; precinct 11, Ward 14; precinct 4, Ward 23; precinct 9, Ward 22; precinct 22, Ward 22; precinct 7, Ward 22; precinct 3, Ward 6; precinct 4, Ward 5; precinct 2, Ward 5; precinct 7, Ward 4; precinct 6, Ward 4; precinct 4, Ward 4; precinct 3, Ward 4; precinct 7, Ward 5; precinct 2, Ward 4; precinct 12, Ward 23; precinct 6, Ward 5; precinct 1, Ward 5; precinct 9, Ward 5; precinct 13, Ward 22; precinct 3, Ward 23; precinct 5, Ward 5; precinct 1, Ward 15; precinct 12, Ward 24; precinct 5, Ward 4; precinct 3, Ward 5, the minority say that they have been unable to find anything in the testimony to justify the conclusion of the majority that the election was conducted in an irregular manner and that the polls of the several precincts were unworthy of belief and should be excluded. On the contrary, they find in 37 of the 41 precincts the evidence of the election officials in each of these precincts to be to the effect that the election in those various precincts was conducted in a regular and lawful manner.

The remaining precinct, which seems to have been a great boon to the contestant, was precinct 13, Ward 23. "The Butler stables," the majority say in their report, "are located in this precinct." Here the majority exhibit their usual amount of fairness in this case by quoting part of the testimony of John R. McCarthy, superintendent of the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company, which concern owns the stables referred to. The testimony of Mr. McCarthy is quoted below in toto.

This testimony proves that the Butler stables, so called, is an institution made the headquarters for several hundred employees of the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company. This testimony proves that these stables constituted practically the only home that several hundred employees of the company owning the stables had.

It is true these voters may represent a nomadic element, but under the law of the United States and the State of Missouri they were entitled to participate in the election of a Representative from that district, and the minority submit that a more deliberate attempt to disfranchise voters was never attempted than the expunging from the returns in this case the whole poll from precinct 13 in Ward 23.

Testimony of John R. McCarthy. (Pp. 2043-2047, record.)

"John R. McCarthy, of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined, deposeth and saith as follows:

"Direct examination by James J. Butler, Esq.:

"Q. What is your name?

"A. John R. McCarthy.

"Q. Where do you reside?

"A. 3418 Laclede avenue.

"Q. Have you any other place of residence that you occupy, Mr. McCarthy?

"A. Yes, sir; 3865 Forest Park boulevard.

"Q. Do you reside and sleep at both of these places?

"A. Yes; I reside at—I resided at 3865 Forest Park boulevard continually for about six years, up to within about a year and a half ago.

"Q. You still sleep there?

"A. I sleep now at 3418 Laclede avenue. I have a room over the office, and I occasionally sleep there at 3865 Forest Park boulevard.

"Q. What is your business?

"A. Superintendent of the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company.

"Q. Mr. McCarthy, as superintendent of the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company I will ask you to state where the stables of that concern are?

"A. You might call it the northeast corner of Vandeventer and Forest Park boulevard.

"Q. Northeast corner of Vandeventer avenue and Forest Park boulevard?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What are the dimensions of that stable?

"A. I believe the correct dimensions are 200 feet front by 215 feet deep.

"Q. These are about the dimensions?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is it a one-story or two-story structure?

"A. Two-story.

"Q. Does the second story cover the complete area of the building?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And has the same square footage as the lower floor?

"A. Yes, sir; the same thing.

"Q. What is the area of that building by square feet, if you know?

"A. Well, I don't know positively; I judge somewhere about——

"Q. Well, you say it is 200 feet front and 215 feet deep?

"A. I think that would make 430,000 square feet, or something like that.

"Q. Forty-three thousand square feet?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. I will ask you, Mr. McCarthy, to state what that stable is used for.

"A. Well, the lower floor is used for nothing but stalls—stall room. The upper floor—why, one corner we use for a little feed. We get our feed in there just as we use it. The rest of it—why, the men sleep there.

"Q. How many men are employed by the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company?

"A. We employ all the way from two close up to four hundred men. That all depends on the season of the year.

"Q. How many men do you employ in the summer time?

"A. In the summer time it all depends on the crop of vegetables. If we have a plentiful crop, we have close to 400 men.

"Q. Employed in the collection of garbage, and so on?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many men are employed there in the duller seasons?

"A. Well, they will run from 150 to 175, and so on.

"Q. How many men were employed by the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company on or about November 4 last?

"A. I could not say positively; something over two hundred.

"Q. How many of that two hundred sleep or make their lodging in that building?

"A. In fact, the most of them make their lodgings there. In fact, I induce them to do so.

"Q. You say you induce them to do so; why?

"A. Well, we turn out, as a rule, very early in the morning, and we require a lot of men, and by inducing the men and giving them a place to sleep, you always have men on hand. Then, again, we do other outside hauling that requires us to have men. Just, for instance, look at two weeks ago last Sunday in that snowstorm. I got an order for forty, or fifty, or sixty teams—whatever I could turn out—from the city—from Mr. Becker, of the street department—for teams to haul snow with. In cases of that kind the men come in very handy. Go out and try to find forty or fifty men through the town at 6 o'clock on a Sunday morning, and you will find it a very hard thing. In fact, you wouldn't be able to find them.

"Q. Then you will state that last November there was from 150 to 200 men sleeping around that stable?

"A. We have pretty near that many constantly the year round.

"Q. Do you know how many men were registered from that stable?

"A. I could not say.

"Q. Do you know how many men voted from that stable?

"A. I couldn't tell you that either.

"Q. Were you present on election day when any of the negroes from that stable were voting or went to vote?

"A. I was in the precinct when there were a few of the men voting there, and I was at the barn in the neighborhood of noon time, when a few of the men then were feeding their teams in the barn. They told me they were going over to vote.

"Q. Did you send any of these men to vote, or marshal any of their forces in any way?

"A. I never asked a man to go to the polls and vote.

"Q. I will ask you, Mr. McCarthy, as superintendent of that stable, in view of the fact that Mr. Udell and others have testified here that officers of that stable and company have had slips passed to negroes, and so and so, which they claim and allege contained the names of fraudulent registrations, is that true or not?

"A. That is absolutely false.

"Q. Were there any slips of any character passed to any men at that stable that day with the intention of fraud, fraudulent voting, or anything of that kind?

"A. As I say, there was not a slip to my knowledge, and I was around most of the day. In fact, we never made a practice of that. We never did do it. As I say, those gentlemen whom you have reference to, I don't know them. I seen them at the polls myself two or three times during the day, and conversing with the policemen within 5 feet of the polling place.

"Q. Do you know who they were?

"A. I understood, afterwards, Mr. Udell was one, and Ford Smith, the lawyer, was one of them.

"Q. You state positively that there were no slips issued that day to any of your men?
"A. No, sir; not a slip.
"Q. Do you know of any fraudulent registration of any kind whatever from that stable?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Were there any slips, or anything of any character, handed to these men on that day?
"A. Well, the day before the election Mr. Archibald Carr, who was running for clerk of the circuit court, and Eddy Barnard, both Republicans, came over to the office and handed me, I judge, in the neighborhood of 300 to 500 each of their cards. I told them I would distribute them around or have the boy in the office distribute them. I never asked any of the men to vote, and I didn't care who they voted for.
"Q. Did you distribute any of these cards?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Do you know if anybody else distributed any?
"A. I didn't see any distributed.
"Q. Did you ask them to distribute them?
"A. I asked the young man—the boy who attends to the 'phone—to distribute them.
"Cross-examination by Wm. M. Kinsey, esq.:
"Q. Mr. McCarthy, are you a Republican or Democrat?
"A. I am a Democrat.
"Q. Married or single?
"A. Married.
"Q. You now live at 3418 Laclede avenue?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. How long have you lived there?
"A. Close onto two years.
"Q. You say you sometimes sleep at 3865 Forest Park boulevard?
"A. Yes, sir; as I said, I slept there for six years, up until I married. I am only married a few years. When we were on early watches in summer time, when we got out at 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, we slept there altogether.
"Q. Were you sleeping there last fall on the 4th of November, and prior thereto?
"A. No, sir; only on Sunday mornings. We turn out earlier on Sunday mornings than other days.
"Q. Were you a registered voter at the last election?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Did you vote?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What class of people are these men that work about this stable, white or colored?
"A. Colored.
"Q. All colored?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. They are men who live all over town, do they not?
"A. Well, most of them, as I say—the reason that I induce the men to stay there is that the majority of them, if they were not allowed to stay there, really would not have any home.
"Q. They live about town from one place to another, don't they?
"A. I couldn't say they live about town. I don't know of them even having a home.
"Q. Do you know that they have no homes?
"A. I couldn't say any more than the home they have there. They slept there with me. I slept there six years myself.
"Q. Are any of them married men, as far as you know?
"A. Well on pay night you would think they had a dozen wives. I have seen three and four come up and say they were the same man's wife.
"Q. They are muchly married, are they?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. These are all drivers of your slop carts and wagons?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And what is called the poor class of labor, in the sense that it commands low wages?
"A. No, sir; we pay a fair wage.
"Q. I don't mean that—I say, it is a class of labor that commands a lower scale of wages?
"A. Well, they don't get an exorbitant scale; no.
"Q. They come and go from time to time?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Your force is changing all the time?
"A. Yes, sir; in winter time, you know, we are forced to lay off some of the men, and they go away for two or three months and in the spring come back again.
"Q. Don't the force change all the time?
"A. No, sir; of course some of them change, like in any other business. I have some there eight and nine years.
"Q. How many?
"A. I guess a hundred or over; I could not say exactly how many; quite a number; in fact, the colored men consider the position a very good one.
"Q. You say these men, or a considerable number of them, sleep in the second story of this building?
"A. Yes, sir
"Q. How is that story fitted up?
"A. There are three rooms. We have three rooms in one corner of it, and the others run down between in regular aisles. There are cots.
"Q. Is it divided into rooms?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. What sleeping accommodations are there there?
"A. One big room there outside of the three rooms which we separate ourselves off from them.
"Q. That is the rooms you occupy yourself sometimes, and some others, employees of the company, who have separate rooms?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. They are partitioned off?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Whatever persons sleep there sleep in the large room, do they?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What accommodations are there?
"A. Those who wish to can buy their own cots and bedding. We allow them that privilege.
"Q. The company don't furnish beds?
"A. No, sir. We only keep a night watchman on that floor at nighttime.
"Q. So whatever beds, cots, or bedclothing they have they furnish themselves?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. How many men were doing that in that stable on November 1 last year?
"A. I could not tell exactly. I judge in the neighborhood of 200 men.
"Q. Do you mean that 200 men were sleeping there?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you mean by that they slept there every night for some time prior to the election?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. For how long?
"A. I judge pretty near all the summer. We had quite a force on, and this was about the winding up of our season.
"Q. Did they sleep there every night?
"A. Pretty near every night; yes, sir.
"Q. Any women among them?
"A. No, sir; that is something we don't allow.
"Q. How many other places—stables—has the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company? I mean besides this one you mentioned.
"A. We have no other stable. We have places where we keep some of our stock once in a while, at what is known as the south factory of the St. Louis Sanitary Company.
"Q. You don't mean that all of your teams start out from one place in the morning to go over the entire city?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. They all leave this place at Forest Park boulevard and Vandeventer avenue?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Are all of these people colored men who sleep there?
"A. Yes, sir. There is myself——
"Q. I mean excluding yourself.
"A. There are about two more white men.
"Q. Aside from yourself and those two other white men, all those who stay there and who were registered from there are colored men?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you take any active interest or part in politics yourself, Mr. McCarthy?
"A. Well, I take a little.
"Q. What do you mean by a little? Did you see that the men in your precinct are registered? Did you do that?
"A. No, sir; I don't believe I ever asked a man to register.
"Q. Did you ever ask a man to vote?
"A. No, sir. I think that is the duty of every citizen to do that himself.
"Q. You never asked a man to register and never asked a man to vote?
"A. No, sir; knowingly, I did not.
"Q. The Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company is a corporation, is it, Mr. McCarthy?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Who is the president of it?
"A. Mr. John R. Butler.
"Q. Who are the other officers of the corporation?
"A. I don't know them.
"Q. Don't you know who the vice-president is?
"A. No, sir; I don't know if there is a vice-president.
"Q. Don't you know who the secretary is?
"A. No, sir; I think Mr. O'Connor is.
"Q. Don't you know who the treasurer is?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Who the stockholders are?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Mr. John R. Butler is the brother of Hon. James J. Butler, the contestee in this case?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Where were you on election day, Mr. McCarthy?
"A. That would be a pretty hard question for me to answer. I am a pretty busy man. I am all over this town, you might say, especially the north part of the city. I was principally all over that ward that day, you might say, with the exception of two hours at noon time that I put in feeding.
"Q. What time did you start out in the morning?
"A. We start out to work every morning at 5 o'clock.
"Q. I am speaking of this particular morning.
"A. I left the barn, I judge, about 7, and went to breakfast.
"Q. Where did you go to breakfast?
"A. I went to 3418 Laclede avenue.
"Q. And from there you started out through the ward?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. That is, the Twenty-third Ward?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And you didn't go back to the barn until about feeding time at noon?
"A. Yes, sir; I was back in the neighborhood of the barn, as I say, two or three times before dinner.
"Q. Well, what did you do in the afternoon?
"A. After I had dinner, I came in to feed my horse, and, as I said, stayed there about two hours, and went through, you might say, again. Mr. Clark, I met him. Him and I had several little conversations. I believe I met him about three or four times.
"Q. What Clark do you refer to?
"A. Pat Clark, the Republican committeeman of that ward.
"Q. Where did you meet him?
"A. At precinct 4, and I met him once in the morning at precinct 13. That is that precinct there. I met him at precinct 4 and met him and Mr. Regan at precinct 10, I believe it is, on South Compton avenue. Just as a person will on election day, I asked him how everything was, and he said everything was quiet and peaceable.
"Q. Then you were out through the Twenty-third Ward on that day principally in the interest of Mr. Butler, the candidate for Congress, were you?
"A. No, sir; I was out for the Democratic ticket.
"Q. And incidentally for Mr. Butler?
"A. No, sir; as I told you before, I am a Democrat, I don't stop for one man. I go from top to bottom.
"Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Udell that day?
"A. I don't know the gentleman at all. Just as I told you, these gentlemen were out there and at this precinct in the morning. They were there all day, in fact.
"Q. How far is the polling place from the stable?
"A. I judge about—the blocks there are awfully long, two numbers come in there together—I judge, in the neighborhood of 3½ to 4 blocks.
"Q. The blocks being long, how many feet would they be—1,500 feet?
"A. Yes, sir; they are all of that, I think.
"Q. When you saw these men were you at the barn or at the polling place?
"A. At the polling place. When I was standing in front of the barn I seen one of the gentlemen coming down Forest Park boulevard, on the opposite side. That street there is a very wide street, something in the neighborhood of 150 feet wide.
"Q. Are you a stockholder yourself in the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company?
"A. No, sir; I wish to God I was a stockholder in something.
"Q. I don't want to inquire into the private business of the company, Mr. McCarthy, but I would like to have you state about the average wages you pay.
"A. The lowest wages we pay is $40 a month, up to $80.
"Q. I am speaking of the men who drive the wagons.
"A. That is what I am talking about. No, $75; we have one man at $75 who drives a wagon.

"Q. The majority of them get about $40?
"A. Yes, sir; nothing less.
"Q. The higher-priced men who get about $75 are something like foremen, are they?
"A. Not exactly foremen; they are men whose value we have appreciated, who take care of their stock, etc. We always appreciate good men the same as any other business concern.
"Q. What territory do you have to cover in the summer time?
"A. Cover the whole city of St. Louis; the entire city.
"Q. The entire city of St. Louis?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You know, I presume—it has been in evidence before—but I will ask you whether this company has a contract.
"A. Yes, sir; for the entire city of St. Louis.
"Q. For removing garbage?
"A. Yes, sir. We cover the whole, entire city, also including the World's Fair grounds. We have a special contract for that.
"Q. Is all of that hauled one place or more than one place?
"A. It is hauled two places.
"Q. One in South St. Louis and one in North St. Louis?
"A. Yes, sir; the most of it to South St. Louis.
"Q. What time, what number of hours per day, are your men required to work?
"A. Some of our men work six, seven, eight hours. Of course, where you have a great number of teams and men out, barring accidents, they never work over eight and a half or nine hours.
"Q. Eight or nine hours is the limit for a day's work?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. For the haulers?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And the remaining of the twenty-four hours of the day belong to the men?
"A. Yes, sir. Well, there is a time in the morning taking care of their team, and in the evening coming home, and the men have their wagons to grease and harness to clean. That occupies some of the time.
"Q. Is that included in the eight or nine hours?
"A. I figure they are on the street from eight to nine hours. As I say, sometimes they are later. A wagon might break down, and take weather like this and try to clean some of the alleys in the west end of St. Louis they are liable to be there for a week if you don't go after them four or five times.
"Q. How many teams do you keep in South St. Louis, near the reduction works there?
"A. I couldn't state positively; I very seldom get to the reduction works in South St. Louis.
"Q. You include in the number of employees those that headquarter down there, do you not?
"A. None of them headquarter down there. These teams that stay there, the men come home with other men coming home at that time.
"Q. They leave their teams there?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You have a place in North St. Louis where the same thing is done, where the teams are stabled and the horses taken care of?
"A. There are only very few——
"Q. There is a place where that is done?
"A. Yes, sir; but they only keep a few head of stock there, I believe.
"Q. Don't you know?
"A. I couldn't state positively, because we have nothing to do with that company; that is a separate and distinct corporation entirely.
"Q. You do the hauling of the garbage?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You mean you don't do any of the reduction up there?
"A. No, sir; we just haul in there. The only time we keep any stock there is in the real warm weather; that is, simply to provide for any of our stock that may be very hot, or such as that. Then we pull our stock up into the factory there. They are obliged to keep the windows down, and it is very hot in there. We keep stock there to pull a wagon up the incline.
"Q. What months in the year do you consider your busy months?
"A. From the 15th of June to about the 15th of November or the 1st of December."

It is true that there is shown in the evidence instances where fewer ballots were found in the box than the poll books show to have been cast, and this is taken by the majority to be an evidence of fraud, and great stress is laid upon that particular fact in their report. They totally exclude from their guessing the possibility that defective ballots are not placed in the box but are directed under the law to be segregated and placed in envelopes and kept separate and apart from the remaining ballots when returned.

These envelopes are what are known as rejected-ballot envelopes. The evidence shows that no demand was made by contestant or his counsel for these rejected-ballot envelopes, by which the discrepancy between the number of ballots found in the box and the number of votes shown by the poll book to have been cast would have been accounted for.

The unreliability of the city directory as used in this case is demonstrated sufficiently by the fact that 41 per cent of the witnesses called by the contestant to sustain his contentions have not the honor to have their names entered in that book as residing at the addresses which they gave at the time this testimony was taken.

The minority submit here the testimony of Henry Smith, superintendent of the registry division of the St. Louis post-office (p. 1577), and Susan E. Austin, subpostmistress of the United States post-office at St. Louis (p. 1570), as to the reliability of this registered-letter testimony, without which evidence the case of the contestant must fall.

Their testimony is as follows:

"Henry Smith, of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of contestee, deposeth and saith as follows:

"Direct examination by Mr. BUTLER:

"Q. What is your business?
"A. Superintendent of the registration division of the St. Louis post-office.
"Q. Do you remember of a number of registered letters being sent out by Mr. John B. Owens or others during the last campaign to various citizens of the city of St. Louis in the Twelfth Congressional district, with a notice to return to a Mr. Brushaire, or some such similar name, if the parties were not properly found?
"A. I know that one John Brushaire presented some 26,000 registered letters to be sent through the mails during the month of November some time.
"Q. Do you know John Brushaire?
"A. No, sir; I don't know him from Adam.
"Q. Was John Brushaire John B. Owens?
"A. Not to my knowledge.
"Q. Do you know to whom you gave the receipts for those letters?
"A. I don't remember the name of the party that got them, but they were sent on John Brushaire's order. The order to deliver was signed by John Brushaire. I have the order in my office.
"Q. You don't know him, you say?
"A. Don't know him.
"Q. Never saw him before?
"A. Not to my knowledge.
"Q. Would you know him if you saw him again?
"A. The party that the letters were delivered to?
"Q. The party that the letters were sent by?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. You were the party that received——
"A. No, sir; the clerk at the window received them.
"Q. Do you know what the modus operandi of the distribution of the registered letters of that character was; what the special orders?
"A. To let them take the regular course, the same as registered mail does in every particular. A registered letter is supposed to be received with the address and the name of the sender and the name and address of the addressee plainly written on.
"Q. How long is registered mail held for the parties for whom it is addressed?
"A. Thirty days, unless not otherwise specified. In this case it was specified to return at once. It was not the same as the usual registered mail. Any individual can put on a letter 'return at once.'
"Q. There was no time given—no one or two days, or anything like that?
"A. Just simply 'return at once.'
"Q. And in case the party was not found the letter was returned at once?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you know what the rule is with regard to when a party is not found?
"A. If there is no specified instructions there is a card left for the person to call at the office. But if the instructions are that the letter must be tried—if not found to be returned to the sender at once—you must be guided by the discretion of the carrier.
"Q. What was the rule in this case?
"A. The request was complied with.
"Q. To return at once to the sender?
"A. Yes, sir. There was no discretion left with the carrier whatever to attempt to find the party later. The carrier was left simply to carry out his orders.
"Q. If he did not find the party at the first call it was returned at once? That was the order?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Even though the letter carrier knew the party lived there, but was not at home, would the registered letter be left?
"A. No, sir; not unless there was an order there so that somebody could sign for it.
"Q. Isn't it a fact that if a registered letter was addressed to me at my residence—I believe I am fairly well known in the city of St. Louis—that even that letter would not be left at my address unless I had previously left an order there?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Notwithstanding the fact that I had not been expecting a registered letter?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What would happen then?
"A. It would be returned to the office and notice left that there was a registered letter there, unless the party that lived at that house stated that you would be in to-morrow at such and such a time during delivery hours. Then the carrier would bring it back.
"Q. If the party stated that I was not in the habit of being in at delivery hours, what then?
"A. Notice would be left at your house to call at the main office for your letter. The letter would be kept thirty days, unless otherwise specified.
"Q. In this case the specification was to return it immediately—no order to hold it at all?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. In the event of a notice being left and the party carrying the notice to the post-office, what then would be necessary in order to secure the possession of this coveted letter?
"A. They could not possibly get it if the party had called and it had been returned to them.
"Q. In case the letter was there, what would be necessary?
"A. They would have to be identified to the satisfaction of the delivery clerk?
"Q. In the event the person was not in a position to bring such evidence, he could not receive the letter?
"A. That is not the rule in all cases. If the person has any letters to show that they are the proper party they usually get them.
"Q. So this lady who has just testified here, who is a postmistress in the city of St. Louis and claims that about 2,000 of these letters went through her post-office, and says that she would not give any of them up to anybody unless they were positively identified by parties known to her, did she do anything which was contrary to the rules of the post-office?
"A. I am not responsible for her acts at all.
"Q. Is there any record kept in the post-office of the number of people who called for those letters and are refused on account of improper identification?
"A. None whatever.
"Q. Then it would be impossible for you or any of the post-office authorities to state how many of the so-called 25,000 registered letters which were sent out were called for and refused?
"A. Yes; the only ones we know about are the ones that were delivered.

"By Mr. Holtcamp:

"Q. In the event that a letter should be delivered, for instance, at Mr. Butler's house, would his wife be allowed to receipt for it?
"A. No, sir; not unless she had an order from him.

"Mrs. Susan E. Austin, of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of the contestee, deposeth and saith as follows:

"Direct examination by James J. Butler, esq.:

"Q. What is your name?
"A. Susan E. Austin.
"Q. Where do you live?
"A. I have a place at 2834 Manchester and 2949 Garrison court.
"Q. 2834 Manchester?
"A. That is the store—the office.
"Q. You conduct a store there and a subpost-office?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You are a postmistress of the United States?
"A. Yes, sir; I am superintendent of that station.
"Q. That is a subpost-office of the city of St. Louis?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. You were so commissioned on November 4 last?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And later?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you remember, Mrs. Austin, of a number of registered letters being sent out from your post-office, addressed to citizens, with postmarks on them, by Mr. Aldridge, I believe is the name?
"A. No, sir; no letters sent out under that name.
"Q. Sent by Aldridge?
"A. No, sir.

"Q. Do you remember any letters being sent out for political purposes of that character?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What was the name?
"A. Breshaire.
"Q. Do you remember how many went through your office, if any?
"A. I can't say exactly; in the neighborhood of 2,000.
"Q. Do you know what the contents of those letters were?
"A. I can't tell what the contents were of all of them. I saw the contents of some of them.
"Q. What were the contents of the few you read or saw?
"A. Something about election purposes. I can't say.
"Q. Election purposes?
"A. I can't say.
"Q. Nothing of any value nor anything of that kind contained therein?
"A. Not that I saw.
"Q. It was a series of questions, was it not, asking them to give information about election laws?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Was it?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you know how many of those letters came back to your post-office, or were called for at your post-office, or how many were delivered from there?
"A. I can't say. The books will show.
"Q. Do you know there was a number of them?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. For which notices were left?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you know how many were delivered upon notice? Returned?
"A. I can't say. I could tell if I had the books.
"Q. Do you know how many notices were brought to you of registered letters delivered at the house in which the parties failed—were not present—and that they brought the notice to you asking for the registered letter?
"A. About how many there were?
"Q. Yes.
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Do you know how many notices were brought that you refused to give letters to?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Do you know that there were any?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. How many?
"A. I can't say.
"Q. There was a number of them that you know of?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Why didn't you give the letters upon the——
"A. Because I didn't know the parties. They were not identified; did not identify themselves to my satisfaction.
"Q. And the Post-Office Department required that they should bring identification?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Positive identification, with their notice of registered letters?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And you would not give it to them under any other circumstances?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. You don't know how many so came?
"A. No, sir; I can't say.
"Q. You don't know what was the number of them; but there was a number?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. They brought notices to you and claimed that they were the parties?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And you refused to issue the letters to them because they could not be identified to your satisfaction?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Do you think it would be possible for you to identify many of the 2,000 persons to whom those letters were sent?
"A. No, sir; I could not; but they could bring some one. I gave them the privilege of bringing any of the merchants around there that I was acquainted with.
"Q. How many of the 2,000 to whom those letters were sent could you identify personally, if you know?
"A. I can't say that. Quite a good many. I have been in business nearly four years there.
"Q. How long were the letters held in your possession before being returned to the writer?
"A. Five or six days—some of them.
"Q. Wasn't there an order in this particular case to return them within two days?
"A. No, sir; return immediately.
"Q. You did not return them immediately?
"A. I couldn't. There was too many for the carriers to attend to.
"Q. Those that were returned to you as not delivered were returned to the writer, immediately, were they?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. There was no chance given to persons to come and claim them?
"A. Oh, yes; they were kept there five days.
"Q. Five days?
"A. Five or six.
"Q. After the carrier had failed to deliver them?
"A. No, sir; not all of them.
"Q. Not all of them?
"A. No, sir.
"Q. Were there any persons—did any persons come to claim the letters after the letters had been sent back to the original post-office?
"A. I couldn't say.
"Q. Do you know what became of their claim? Where they were referred?
"A. Down to the main post-office.

"Cross-examination by Mr. HOLTCAMP:

"Q. When these parties came to your office to call for these letters you were ready to deliver them if they had been identified by anyone there in the neighborhood?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Anyone that you knew?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And when they failed to do that—failed to bring anyone in the neighborhood there to identify them—you did not deliver them the letters?
"A. No, sir."

NOTE.—By consent of parties the signature of the witness to the above deposition is waived.

SUSAN E. AUSTIN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 3d day of February, 1903.
[SEAL.] PETER J. NOLAN,
Notary Public, St. Louis, Mo.

My term expires June 30, 1906.

The attention of the House is called to the fact that several hundred witnesses were called to testify as to the genuineness of their signatures to the petition of electors by which Mr. Wagoner secured a place upon the official ballot, and that over one-half of these witnesses testified that their signatures as attached to the petition were absolute forgeries; that they were signed without their consent and without their knowledge; that a large majority of the remainder of the witnesses testified that their names were secured through fraudulent representations, and that a great number of these were Democrats and testified that they voted for Butler.

The attention of this House is called by the minority of the committee to the fact that Mr. Butler's popularity with the colored population of this district is amply proven by the testimony of leading members of the colored race, including J. Milton Turner, ex-minister to Liberia under President U. S. Grant; Roma J. Raymond, a prominent colored Republican attorney of the city of St. Louis; George B. Vashon, a colored educator and journalist of the city of St. Louis, and C. C. Rankin, William Wilkinson, whose testimony is quoted as follows:

"J. Milton Turner (p. 1951): Direct examination by Mr. Walsh:
"Q. Where do you live?
"A. 1516 Goode avenue.
"Q. What is your age, Mr. Turner?
"A. Sixty years old.
"Q. What position, if any, have you occupied under the National Government?
"A. Well, I was special agent for the United States Revenue Service under Mr. Arthur's Administration. I was United States minister and consul-general under Mr. Grant's Administration, and Mr. Hayes's partly.
"Q. Didn't you hold some position in connection with the Cherokee matter?
"A. Well, I represented them in a claim against the Government, a very large claim, amounting to more than a million dollars.
"Q. How long have you been a Republican, or affiliated with the Republican party?
"A. From 1870 until the first election of Mr. Cleveland.
"Q. Have you had an opportunity for learning the sentiment of the colored people in the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What has been your connection and affiliation with the colored people of the Twelfth Congressional district, and how long has this connection or affiliation continued?
"A. Well, I am a native of St. Louis, and of course became a voter in 1870, and I have had a close identification with the voters not only in the district, but all the districts of the State ever since.
"Q. What is and what was the sentiment on the 4th day of November, 1902, of the colored people of the Twelfth Congressional district so far as you were able to observe?
"A. Well, the negro people of that district ever since the last election of Mr. Pearce have been dissatisfied with the Republican party, in large numbers. At least two-thirds of them voted the Democratic ticket, and on the 4th of November they felt that they had additional reasons, because they had a personal liking, in large numbers, for Mr. James J. Butler, and they voted for him.
"Q. That was owing to the personal regard that they had for Mr. James J. Butler?
"A. Largely, and largely because of their utter dissatisfaction with the Republican party.
"Q. About what percentage of the colored voters of the city of St. Louis are residents of the Twelfth Congressional district?
"Mr. RICHEY. If you know about that?
"A. I can approximate it. Approximately between 3,000 and 4,000. Nearer 4,000 than 3,000.
"Q. Voters?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What proportion does that bear to the colored voters of the city of St. Louis?
"A. Well, I should say that very nearly one-third—fully a third—of the negro voters of St. Louis, and possibly more, live in the Twelfth Congressional district.
"Q. Isn't it a fact that the larger colored settlements are contained in the Twelfth Congressional district?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. And where the greater number of the colored population actually center?
"A. Where they colonize. They live in little clusters, you know, and most of those are in the Twelfth Congressional district.
"Q. So that your approximation of about one-third is likely to be less than the actual number?
"A. Well, I wanted to be conservative in my expression. I am satisfied that it is less. To answer you, if you will permit me, there are about 9,000 registered negro voters in the city of St. Louis, and I expect nearly half of them live in the district.
"Q. Now, of that approximately one-half of the negro voters of the city of St. Louis, what proportion did I understand you to say supported Mr. James J. Butler and voted for him?
"A. Oh, I should think there are more than two-thirds. You see in Mr. Butler's election politics largely disappeared in that neighborhood. Very many Republican negroes expressed themselves to me, both before and after election, as desiring and having voted for Butler.
"Q. Mr. Turner, you are a colored man?
"WITNESS. I don't think I would be mistaken for a white man."

George B. Vashon (p. 1593):

"Q. Where do you reside?
"A. 2243 Oregon avenue.
"Q. You are a negro citizen and voter of the city of St. Louis?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. What is your business, at present?
"A. I am idle at present; I am not doing anything. Up to the first of the year I was inspector in the license department. Prior to that time I was assistant in the election commissioners' office. Prior to that time I was publishing a newspaper here in St. Louis.
"Q. Publishing a negro newspaper in St. Louis?
"A. Yes, sir.
"Q. Have you made yourself familiar with the politics and feelings of the colored people of the Twelfth Congressional district prior to the last election?
"A. Yes; I think I am pretty familiar with it.
"Q. Will you state, as nearly as you can, what the sentiments of the colored people in the Twelfth Congressional district were prior to the last election with regard to the Congressional candidates?
"A. I think, I am positive, that 90 per cent of the colored men in the Twelfth Congressional district were supporting Mr. Butler's candidacy for Congress; about 90 per cent of them. The reason I state that is this: For the last twelve years I and some number of other negro men—the number augmented in recent years—began making political proselytes amongst the negro men in the interest of the Democratic party and the Democratic nominee with more or less marked success. The first success we had, which exceeded our expectations, was in 1900, when Mr. James J. Butler was first nominated for Congress.

Negro men, with whom argument failed to cause to give any consideration to Democratic nominees before, came into the Democratic party and supported the ticket, and many of them supported him; a number beyond our expectations supported the entire ticket. They came practically en masse. After the contest resulted in his unseating we found that the number was further augmented. I can safely say that I consider 90 per cent to be an underestimation of the negro vote in the Twelfth Congressional district.

"Q. Heretofore the negroes have been voting the Republican ticket, have they not?

"A. To a greater or less degree. Now, when we began this campaign about nine years ago, in 1893, the first campaign, we only found 18 negroes that would stand out and out and be counted for the Democratic party.

"Q. A number of negro voters in St. Louis are now holding positions of trust under the government of the city of St. Louis, are they not?

"A. Yes; there are quite a number of them.

"Q. Under the Democratic government?

"A. Yes, sir. I don't think that was one of the moving reasons why they went into the Democratic party, or why they voted the Democratic ticket. Of course that is a consideration. It is with all men. When we first started the campaign in 1893 we found it was very difficult to convert a great many negroes that were bigoted in their political views to the Democratic party. We began on negroes who were not of voting age. Started the P. J. Pauley Club in 1894, and afterwards the Greely Club. Many of them became of age in 1895, 1896, and 1900, and in 1898 it blossomed out into an independent movement where they put up their own nominee for Congress in two districts—a man named Scott in the Twelfth district and a man named Dodge in the Eleventh district."

C. C. Rankin (p. 1596):

"Direct examination by Mr. BUTLER:

"Q. Where do you reside?

"A. 1714 Chestnut street.

"Q. You are a voter in the city of St. Louis—a colored voter?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Negro voter, rather?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Are you familiar with the sentiments and feelings of the negro population of the city of St. Louis politically?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know what the sentiments of the voting population, the negro voting population, of the Twelfth Congressional district were in the last campaign with reference to candidates for Congress?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What were they?

"A. I think about 90 per cent of the negro voters were for James J. Butler for Congress; many of them voted for Mr. Butler and voted the Republican ticket as to the rest of the ticket.

"Q. You believe that to be a conservative estimate of the negro voters of the Twelfth Congressional district?

"A. Yes, sir; I do.

"Q. You are in a position to know the sentiment of those people?

"A. Yes, sir: I certainly am; I was amongst them enough during the campaign.

"Q. What is your position?

"A. Deputy sheriff.

"Q. Your position is of such a character as to bring you amongst them frequently?

"A. Yes, sir."

"William Wilkinson (colored), of lawful age, being produced, sworn, and examined on behalf of the contestee, deposeth and saith as follows:

"Direct examination by Mr. WALSH:

"Q. Where do you live?

"A. 2634 Lucas.

"Q. What ward and precinct do you live in?

"A. Twenty-second Ward, tenth precinct, I think.

"Q. You have had some opportunity to learn the sentiment generally of the colored people in the Twelfth Congressional district, have you?

"A. Well, I don't know what you mean exactly.

"Q. As to their feelings toward the Congressional candidacy of Mr. Wagoner and Mr. Butler for Congress?

"A. I have heard some few people express themselves.

"Q. Do you know whether or not that sentiment was favorable to Mr. Butler?

"A. Yes; from all that I could learn, it seemed to be in favor of Mr. Butler.

"Q. What is your business?

"A. I am a barber.

"Q. And you are the proprietor or the part proprietor of a shop?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Where is that?

"A. In the Commonwealth Trust building.

"Q. One of the large buildings of the city?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know of your own knowledge the general sentiment of the better class of colored people in the Twelfth Congressional district with reference to the candidacy of James J. Butler?

"Mr. RICHEY. He said he talked to some few of them.

"WITNESS. I can't say; I mentioned the fact that those with whom I came in contact had spoken very favorably of Mr. Butler.

"Q. You came in contact with a large part of the better class?

"A. I know quite a number; yes, sir."

Roma J. Raymond: Cross-examination by Mr. Walsh (p. 108):

"Q. Mr. Raymond, you are an attorney?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. A colored attorney, who occupies quite a position among the colored people and mix with the very best colored people in town?

"Mr. RICHEY. That is admitted on the part of the contestant.

"Mr. WALSH. I want to get it in the record. This precinct is largely peopled with colored people—on Morgan, High, Lucas, Eleventh, and Twelfth streets, isn't it?

"A. Yes. Well, not so much on Morgan as it is on Linden, Gay, Twelfth, and High.

"Q. And the population is what you might call in a general way dense, isn't it, as to numbers?

"A. In a way, yes, sir; I might. There is a large Italian vote there.

"Q. Yes; but there is quite a large colored population there?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. With many of whom, and in fact most of whom, you are scarcely acquainted, owing to the fact that your profession or business calls you away early in the morning and you return late in the evening?

"A. Well, that may be. Yes; I stated that.

"Q. You are familiar to some extent with the political condition which exists in which the colored people are largely interested in this city, are you not?

"A. Yes; I am.

"Q. Is it not a fact that the last few years there has been a marked defection of the colored vote from the Republican party to the Democratic party?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Very noticeable?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Is it not a fact that a large number of the colored people with whom you are acquainted are very strong and ardent supporters of Mr. James J. Butler?

"A. Yes; that is right.

"Q. Is it not a fact that many of those colored people have come out and openly avowed themselves as supporters of Mr. Butler, and actually voted for him?

"A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Those who have previously been Republicans and voted the straight Republican ticket?

"A. Yes, sir."

Page 110:

"Q. Have you any idea to what extent the negro voters of the Twelfth Congressional district supported the Democratic candidate for Congress, Mr. James J. Butler?

"Mr. RICHEY. I object to whether he has an idea. If he has knowledge of the fact I don't object.

"A. Well, I couldn't say that it is a fact; I couldn't base it on a fact.

"Mr. WALSH. Well, approximate from your knowledge.

"A. I should say about 70 per cent.

"Q. Seventy per cent of the negro voters supported James J. Butler for Congress.

"A. I think so.

Page 1968:

"Direct examination by Mr. WALSH:

"Q. Mr. Raymond, are you familiar with the sentiment of the colored people living in the Twelfth Congressional district with reference to James J. Butler, prior to the election of November 4, 1902?

"A. Well, to some extent; yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know from what you have learned from your connection with them what their attitude was toward the election of Mr. Butler prior to November 4, 1902?

"A. Well, I will say this, that the great bulk of them was greatly impressed with him; they were favorable to his candidacy, you might say."

It is submitted by the minority that while in the report in the contest of Horton v. Butler in the first session of this Congress page after page was devoted to a discussion of the pernicious activity of the police in the election of 1900, there is no censure contained in the present report of the activity of the police in the election of 1902. Only once during the argument did counsel for the contestant refer to the activity of the police, and that was to say that a general order had been given transferring patrolmen from the precincts in the neighborhood of their ordinary beats to precincts with which they were unfamiliar.

Men of affairs will recognize at once that this is an old and familiar measure, taken advantage of in all well-governed cities in order to secure fairness and impartiality in the conduct of elections, and had the majority of the committee seen fit to say anything concerning the activity of the police it would have been to commend the judgment which dictated such an order.

It is also submitted that while in the report on the contest for the seat from this district in the first session there were various references to the pernicious activity of contestee and persons nearly related to him in the election, in this report of the majority, in the argument of counsel, and in the record of the case there is not one syllable which in any way reflects upon the attitude of the contestee or anyone related to him during the campaign for the seat preceding the election of November 4, during the election, or since that time.

The minority of the committee submit that there may have been frauds in the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri in the recent election, but it submits that there has not been pointed out to that committee, and the committee has not been able to determine for themselves, that such fraud is sufficient to vitiate the returns in such a large number of precincts as to give the seat to the contestant.

The minority feels constrained to believe that the majority has ridden roughshod over precedent, law, and orderly procedure in their endeavor to decide this case without sufficient consideration, and to seat a man by the power of a partisan majority who was not elected by the people of the district, and who was not even strong enough with his party to secure a party nomination.

The minority feel that they can not disregard the law that until the contrary is proved the contestee, armed with the credentials of the sovereign State of Missouri authorizing him to represent her on the floor of this House, is entitled to enjoy the rights and privileges of a member of this House until the contrary appears by legal evidence produced before the committee. That such evidence has not been produced before the committee the House and the country can determine without reference to the action of the partisan majority.

We therefore recommend the adoption of the following resolutions, to wit:

"Resolved, That George C. R. Wagoner was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That James J. Butler was elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein."

J. M. ROBINSON.
HENRY D. GREEN.
JOHN J. FEELY.

Mr. FOWLER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1903.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection. It is approved.

FIRST CUSTOMS CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, relative to the proceedings of the First Customs Congress of the American Republics, held at New York in January, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1903.

CONDITION OF LABOR CLASSES IN HAWAII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report upon the commercial, industrial, social, educational, and sanitary condition of the laboring classes of the Territory of Hawaii; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOONER TABITHA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Tabitha, Daniel Gould, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BRIG POMONA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel brig Pomona, Reuben Coffin, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to give notice at this time that immediately at the close of the morning business I shall move to proceed to the consideration of House bill 3109, the pure-food bill.

Mr. WARREN. This morning?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to the notice which I gave yesterday, that I would ask immediately following the morning business to take up half a dozen small House claims bills which it is necessary to have passed to-day in order that they may receive the attention of the Executive and be duly referred to the departments for report before approval or disapproval.

Mr. McCUMBER. The notice does not appear upon the Calendar.

Mr. WARREN. It was given, nevertheless. It is in the RECORD.

Mr. TILLMAN. We did not hear the statement of the Senator from North Dakota. The notice is for what time?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Immediately after the morning business.

Mr. TILLMAN. To-day?

Mr. McCUMBER. This morning.

Mr. SPOONER. What are the claims bills?

Mr. WARREN. They are House bills paying claims of a few hundred dollars each which, as is the case with all claims bills, must go from the White House to the various departments for investigation and return before they can be considered.

Mr. SPOONER. Are they bills which have already passed the Senate in a former Congress?

Mr. WARREN. A part of them have and a part of them have not.

Mr. SPOONER. They are bills reported by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. WARREN. They are bills reported by the Committee on Claims, and they are all House bills.

Mr. SPOONER. Are they Court of Claims bills?

Mr. WARREN. Some of them are Court of Claims and some are miscellaneous. They are mainly miscellaneous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the legislature of Arizona, remonstrating against the annexation to the State of Utah of all that portion of the Territory of Arizona lying north and west of the Colorado River; which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TERRITORY OF ARIZONA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Arizona, ss:

I, Isaac T. Stoddard, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of house memorial No. 2 of the twenty-second legislative assembly of Arizona, which was filed in this office the 20th day of February, A. D. 1903, at 9.40 o'clock a. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 20th day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.]

ISAAC T. STODDARD,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, respectfully represent that—

Whereas a bill is now pending before the Congress of the United States providing for the annexation to the State of Utah of all that portion of the Territory of Arizona lying north and west of the Colorado River; and

Whereas the legislative assembly of the State of Utah has recently sent commissioners from that State to secure, if possible, the assent of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona to such annexation; and

Whereas the members of this legislature, having carefully investigated the matter and being fully advised, declare that the territory sought to be acquired by the State of Utah from Arizona comprises an area nearly as large as the State of Massachusetts; that it is rich in mineral resources, containing vast areas of valuable timber and grazing lands, and thousands of acres of land that can readily be brought under cultivation by a system of water storage and irrigation; that said tract is of inestimable value and importance to the Territory of Arizona as a source of revenue and a field of industry and husbandry; and

Whereas the said tract is traversed from east to west by the Grand Canyon of the Colorado River, the most marvelous and majestic of all nature's handiwork, of world-wide fame, and which has always been peculiarly and exclusively an Arizona endowment:

Therefore, your memorialists respectfully declare that the people of the Territory of Arizona, through the members of their legislative assembly, are unalterably opposed to the annexation of any portion of said tract to the State of Utah, and earnestly protest against the enactment by Congress of any measure designed to accomplish such purpose, and request that the domain of Arizona be protected by Congress against the proposed unjust and indefensible encroachment by the State of Utah.

That the secretary of the Territory be directed to forward one copy of this memorial to the President of the Senate, one copy to the Speaker of the House, and one copy to our Delegate to Congress.

THEODORE T. POWERS,
Speaker of the House.

EUGENE S. IVES,
President of the Council.

I hereby certify that the within is a true copy of house memorial No. 2.

CURT W. MILLER, Chief Clerk.

Filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory of Arizona this 20th day of February, A. D. 1903, at 9.40 a. m.

ISAAC T. STODDARD,
Secretary of Arizona.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Winfield, Kans., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Local Division No. 141, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Ellis; of Local Union No. 17, American Federation of Labor, of Topeka, and of Carpenters and Joiners' Local Union No. 458, American Federation of Labor, of Lawrence, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of S. H. Hamilton and sundry other citizens of Clifton, Kans., and the petition of J. O. Peebler and sundry other citizens of Meriden, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation making $12 the minimum for all pensioners of the civil war instead of $6, as now exists; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Central Labor Union, American Federation of Labor, of Mattoon, Ill., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Spring Hill, Prophetstown, Wyanet, Marshall, Chicago, Rockford, Vandalia, Philo, Lamoille, Jacksonville, North Henderson, Norwood, Lean, Payson, Bloomington, and Decatur, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of Strauss Brothers Company, of Chicago; of the Strickland Company, of Chicago, and of F. Korbel & Bros., of Chicago, all in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GAMBLE presented a petition of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Albee, S. Dak., and a petition of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Flandreau, S. Dak., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of G. H. Brown and other citizens of Northville, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation giving to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I present resolutions of the legislature of the State of Minnesota in favor of the enactment of legislation placing lumber on the free list and for the complete and absolute repeal of all tariff duties pertaining to that industry. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the philosophy and policy of protection was violated when lumber was placed upon the protected list, and is being violated by retaining it upon such list; and

Whereas the existence of a tariff upon lumber is a constant menace to the existence of our forests and offers a premium for their destruction; and

Whereas the supply of standing or growing timber was originally limited in amount and has always been a diminishing quantity, and no adequate or practical steps or measures have ever been takon or devised or adopted in this country to preserve our forests or lumber supply or to restock any of the cut-over areas; and

Whereas the constant diminution of our forest areas is a direct menace to the existence of our water supply, and by their destruction the arid belt in this country is annually increasing, and the existence of our forests is essential to the perpetuity of our lakes and streams, and to maintain the water supply essential to irrigation and for general use and comfort; and

Whereas the supply of standing and growing timber in this State and in many if not all of the Northwestern lumber-producing States will not last to exceed ten years at the present rate of destruction, and there is no present sign of abatement of such destruction, but, on the contrary, there is evident on every hand an intention and disposition on the part of those engaged in lumbering operations to completely and within the shortest possible period of time lay bare our pine lands under the invitation and protection of the lumber tariff; and

Whereas lumber is not a product or industry entitled to protection upon any theory or principle for the reason that the supply is not produced or increased by human agencies, but is produced by taking from the public domain a product and wealth placed there by nature unaided by human agencies, and the supply has always been diminishing and has now reached the verge of annihilation, and the complete annihilation of which can only be postponed or prevented by the repeal of the unjust and nefarious lumber tariff; and

Whereas we shall soon be completely at the mercy of the foreign producer of lumber and entirely dependent upon the foreign product for our supply; and

Whereas the price of lumber is constantly increasing and the domestic supply is wholly inadequate to meet existing demands at reasonable rates and prices, and the existing tariff duties are largely, if not wholly, responsible for the present exorbitant and extortionate prices of lumber and practically shut out the foreign product and effectually stifle competition; and

Whereas there is not now and never has been any valid reason or excuse for the existence of any tariff duties upon lumber, and the same should at once and forever be completely and fully abolished and repealed: Therefore,

Resolved (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they hereby are, requested and petitioned to forthwith initiate and work for such legislation in our National Congress as will at once secure the placing of lumber upon the free list and the complete and absolute repeal of all tariff duties pertaining to the same.

Resolved, That a duly authenticated copy of this resolution be, immediately upon its adoption, forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted by the senate January 27, 1903.

Adopted by the house January 30, 1903.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of concurrent resolution passed by both houses of the Minnesota legislature as indicated above.

S. A. LANGUM,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of American Star Lodge, No. 147, Order of B'rith Abraham, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to modify the methods and practice pursued by the immigration officers at the port of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sleepy Eye, Minn., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brownsdale, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented the petition of John W. Lewis, late captain, Fourth Kentucky Volunteers, and sundry other citizens of the United States, praying that their claims for services rendered during the civil war be referred to the Court of Claims under the so-called Tucker Act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Cheyenne Lodge, No. 46, Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders, of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for the passage of the so-called ship-subsidy bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 4, of Trenton; of Local Union No. 49, of Trenton, and of Local Union No. 45, of Trenton, all of the American Federation of Labor, in the State of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Somerville; of Joel W. Brown, of Jersey City; of William Potts, of Orange; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Manton; of Thomas M. Moore, of Passaic; of John H. Robertson, of Paterson; of Adolphus Lamson, of New Gretna; of J. Walter Pancoast, of Sharptown; of William T. Decker, of Newark; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Haddonfield, and of sundry citizens of Ridgewood, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HOAR. I present sundry petitions signed by the presidents and professors of a large number of American colleges, in addition to those presented heretofore by me, praying that a committee be appointed to inquire into conditions in the Philippines, so that the American people may know the exact condition of affairs in those islands. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation of liquors into prohibition territory; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation providing an educational test for immigrants to this country; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings and grounds; which was referred to the Committee on Public Building and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of James S. Cowden, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the abolition of capital punishment by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of White Cottage, Mount Perry, Brownsville, Zanesville, and South Zanesville, all in the State of Ohio, and of sundry citizens of Rochester, N. Y., praying for the repeal of the Chinese-exclusion law; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a memorial of the Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of Coopers' Local Union No. 164, American Federation of Labor, of Haubstadt, Ind., and a memorial of Coopers' Local Union No. 12, American Federation of Labor, of Evansville, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the issuance of revenue stamps on eighth kegs of beer; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the State Bar Association, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the establishment of a laboratory for the study of the criminal, pauper, and defective classes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Michigan relative to the erection of a monument to Charles Vernon Gridley. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution relative to the erection of a monument to Charles Vernon Gridley.

Resolved (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives from Michigan in the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully requested to use all honorable means to secure, at the present session of Congress, the passage of a bill appropriating the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of erecting a monument in Arlington National Cemetery, at Washington, to the memory of Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, commander of the Olympia at the great naval battle in Manila Bay, May 1, 1898, or to secure the adoption of an amendment to the naval appropriation bill arranging for the same result.

Resolved, That under the signature of the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives, the clerk of this house is instructed without delay to mail to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress a copy of this concurrent resolution.

Adopted by the legislature of the State of Michigan February 19, 1903.

O. B. FULLER,
President of the Senate pro tempore.
JOHN J. CARTON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURROWS. I present a memorial in the matter of Reed Smoot, Senator-elect from the State of Utah. I move that the memorial be placed on the files of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of Sherry, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings and grounds; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ardmore, Ind. T., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation granting unconditional statehood to Oklahoma and Indian Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Department of Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, of Columbus, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference in the civil service to veterans of the civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I give notice that very early to-morrow morning I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7328) to authorize the appointment of Ricardo Islesias as a midshipman in the United States Navy, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $63,620.59 for payment of the award made by the Secretary of the Navy to N. F. Palmer & Co. for losses and damages incurred by them in the construction of the engines, boilers, and appurtenances of the armored cruiser Maine, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4105) to validate certain certificates of soldiers' additional homestead right, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6745) for the relief of Anthony R. Ravenscroft, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 24th instant, proposing to appropriate $50,000 for payment of claims filed with the Quartermaster-General under the act of February 27, 1902, for horses, saddles, and bridles taken from Confederate soldiers in violation of terms of surrender, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7425) authorizing and empowering the Secretary of War to locate a right of way for and granting the same and a right to operate and maintain a line of railroad through the Vancouver Barracks and military reservation, in the State of Washington, to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15243) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Kensey J. Hampton captain and quartermaster in the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

EDITION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. PLATT of New York. From the Committee on Printing I submit a report, accompanied by an amendment. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, who, by resolution of January 5, 1903, was directed to inquire whether the edition of the Revised Statutes of the United States published in 1878 be out of print, so that none can be furnished for the use of Congress or the public; and if in its opinion it be desirable and necessary to reprint the same, and legislation be required for that purpose, that they report such legislation, etc., respectfully reports that it has made such inquiry and is informed by the superintendent of documents, under whose jurisdiction the sale of the Revised Statutes was placed by act approved March 15, 1898, that the supply of the Revised Statutes, second edition, 1878, was practically exhausted in the month of March, 1902; and that, in pursuance of the provisions of a joint resolution of May 22, 1878, request was made upon the Secretary of State for the number of copies estimated to be required for sale and to supply the demand created by act of July 1, 1902, providing for the distribution to each Senator and Representative in Congress of one copy thereof, was informed that the plates were unfit for further use. Your committee, after diligent and repeated inquiry of the Secretary of State, to which inquiries no replies have been as yet received, is of the opinion that, by reason of the public demand for the statutes as well as in view of the necessity of carrying out the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902, aforesaid, the Statutes should be reprinted at the earliest practicable date. In order to carry out what your committee conceives to be the desire of Congress, an amendment in the following language to the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, has been reported from your committee, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations for its consideration:

That the Public Printer shall print and bind in full sheep, at the earliest practicable date, 1,000 copies of the Revised Statutes, second edition, 1878, and shall deliver the same to the superintendent of documents for distribution, as provided by law, and for sale by his office: Provided, That if the plates from which said edition was printed are so worn as to be unfit for use, the matter shall be reset and plated, or otherwise reproduced, under the supervision of the Secretary of State.

Your committee is of the belief that the adoption of this amendment will relieve the immediate necessities, which are urgent, and admit of the question receiving such further consideration in future, in its broader aspects, as may be found to be desirable.

T. C. PLATT, Chairman.

WIDOWS ISLAND, MAINE.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3100) providing for the conveyance of Widows Island, Maine, to the State of Maine, to report it favorably without amendment. It is very brief and I should like to have it considered now.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt the bill is all right, but I desire that we may have some information as to the history of this matter.

Mr. HALE. The place was selected years ago with the idea of making it a hospital for sick sailors, but nothing has been done about it. The Department has taken no advantage of that selection, and does not require it now, and gives it up. This is simply ceding it back. The bill contains a provision that whenever, in the judgment of the President of the United States, the building and grounds ceded to the State are needed by the Navy Department, the United States may resume possession.

It also provides that if the State shall at any time cease or fail to use the property for public purposes it shall immediately revert to the United States, and in that case no compensation shall be made by the United States for any improvements or betterments.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KANSAS RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7392) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dam across the Kansas River within the counties of Shawnee and Wabaunsee, in the State of Kansas, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its considertion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 23d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, who shall be an expert typewriter, at an annual salary at the rate of $1,400, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

G. W. HARDY.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7339) to indemnify G. W. Hardy, of Scott County, Miss., for homestead lands by granting other lands in lieu thereof, to report it favorably with an amendment; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the committee was, in section 1, after the words "United States," in line 5, to insert "in the State of Mississippi;" so as to make the section read:

That there is hereby granted to G. W. Hardy, of Scott County, Miss., 160 acres of the unreserved public land of the United States in the State of Mississippi, such as he shall select and notify to the Secretary of the Interior, in subdivisions not less than 40 acres, the same to be in lieu of land held by him but awarded by the General Land Office to the railroad company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, reported the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game be, and is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas introduced a bill (S. 7433) for the relief of the Pine Bluff Baptist Church, of Jefferson County, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7434) for the relief of the First Baptist Church of Helena, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 7435) for the relief of La Grange College, of Colbert County, Ala.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCENERY introduced a bill (S. 7436) for the relief of Mary B. Douglass; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment extending the provisions of section 11 of the act "To reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899, to all officers of the Navy retired prior to March 3, 1889, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affars, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $350,000 for the purchase of a site in the city of Washington, D. C., for a hall of records, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MAY MOSHER CHASE.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate bill 7207, granting an increase of pension to May Mosher Chase, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and returned to the beneficiary, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PHILIPPINE RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. LODGE. I present a statement of the revenues and expenditures in the Philippine Archipelago during the period from August 20, 1898, to June 30 1902, as certified by the Auditor. I move that the statement be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That the Secretary of War be allowed to withdraw from the files of the Senate the manuscript of the receipts and expenditures in the Philippine Archipelago during the period from August 20, 1898, to June 30, 1902, as certified by the Auditor, a summary of said receipts and expenditures having been ordered printed for the use of the Senate.

MANUFACTURING PLANTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 5718) providing for the sale of sites for manufacturing or industrial plants in the Indian Territory, returned by the House in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the House was adopted by the Senate some time since. The purpose of the motion is to send the bill back to the House. It is understood that the amendment will be disagreed to there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator please state the exact position of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The bill was passed by the Senate and sent to the House. It was amended by the House by providing for a court at Duncan, in the Indian Territory, the amendment having no relation whatever to the bill. The amendment was concurred in by the Senate. I was opposed to it, and afterwards when I came into the Senate I asked to have it reconsidered. We sent it to the House, and the House, by a single objection, declined to vacate the action of the Speaker in signing the bill. It remained then on the Calendar for some months, everybody being anxious that the bill should pass, the only controversy being as to whether there should be attached to the bill a provision for a court at Duncan. The gentleman who moved the amendment in the House is anxious to have the bill passed, and suggested that if the bill should be sent back to the House there would be no objection to vacating the action of the Speaker, and the bill could then be returned to the Senate.

Now, the Senate having agreed to the amendment, my motion is that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it agreed to the amendment, the purpose being to disagree to the amendment and send it back to the House, when the House will, I understand, recede from its amendment and pass the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The attention of the Senate and of the Senator from Arkansas ought to be called, I think, to the fact that a House bill fixing courts in the Indian Territory has been reported from the Judiciary Committee by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], who I do not see in his seat, and that bill I think provides for this matter. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to let this bill lie on the table until the Senator from Texas comes in. I think that court is already provided for in another bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not know that the bill had been reported from the committee; but it is due to absolute frankness for me to say that I will not consent to the establishment of any new courts in the Indian Territory until the circumstances are understood a little better than they are now. Unless I get some information I have not now, I shall not agree to the establishment of the court, and if I can prevent it I will do so. However, when I see the report and confer with the Senator from Texas I may be willing to do it.

This bill has no relation whatever to that measure. It is a bill which is separate and distinct, authorizing the chiefs of those tribes to sell certain tracts of land for manufacturing purposes to manufacturing companies. The proposition to establish a court at Duncan has no relation whatever to the bill. It was put on by the motion of a member of the House, and that member is now willing to have the amendment abandoned, so that the bill may become a law.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And if this bill becomes a law there will be nothing in it about a court at Duncan?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Nothing whatever.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then I have no objection. It does not interfere with the bill from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Not at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the vote be reconsidered by which the amendment of the House was agreed to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator now moves that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That it disagree to the amendment and that the bill be returned to the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry for information. I gave notice this morning of a motion that would be made immediately after the morning business was closed, and I simply wish to ask the Chair whether that notice gives any precedence of a right to be heard to make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not? I wished to know.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not aware of the notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is only by courtesy of the Senate, not by virtue of any rule, that a notice becomes effective.

Mr. McCUMBER. At the same time I wished to be heard on the motion made by the Senator from Iowa. I addressed the Chair, and I did not get recognition to make an objection or to be heard.

Mr. GALLINGER. The motion was not debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I have no desire to cut off the Senator from North Dakota from any motion he desires to make, if it does not lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not lead to debate, because under the rule it is not debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, if he gave notice of a motion, I am quite willing that he may make the motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. The motion of the Senator from Iowa has now passed. It has been declared agreed to by the Chair, and I do not desire to speak of it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At this time in the session it is the duty of the Chair to recognize any Senator in charge of an appropriation bill in preference to anyone else who rises.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that. But the question is whether it was not also the duty of the Chair, before a motion was acted upon and before he declared the motion carried, to recognize anyone who asked to be heard with reference to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a debatable motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I was not aware that the Senator from North Dakota had any plan this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there not an amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What became of the amendment proposing to pay $200,000 to Queen Liliuokalani?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Notice was given by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] that he proposed to raise a point of order when that amendment was reached in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of saying that while I was absent from the Chamber yesterday, engaged in work in committee. I am informed that item in the appropriation bill was reached, and it was agreed to at that time. If there is any objection to it, I will undertake briefly to state why it was that the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico recommended that the bill be so amended as to make an appropriation of $200,000 to be paid in the manner provided. I do not care to do it unless there is opposition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the Senate that the amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and it having been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, it can not be considered further unless by a reconsideration of that vote; but it will be open to a point of order in the Senate or to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. No point of order is now made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order is now made.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the item of $200,000, to which the Senator from Ohio has alluded, has been already agreed to, and it will be subject to reconsideration after the bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 89, line 12, and to reconsider the vote by which that paragraph was stricken out yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote of the Senate adopting the amendment beginning on page 89, line 12. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is reconsidered.

Mr. BACON. What is the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It relates to the proposed building south of the Capitol. I move on page 90, after the word "act," at the end of line 26, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Superintendent of the Capitol is directed to prepare a general plan for the construction of a separate building for the use of the Senate for offices and committee rooms, to be located northeast and nearby to the Capitol, and to estimate the cost of the same, a report thereon to be made to Congress on the 7th day of December, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2, page 91, after the word "building," I move to insert the words "for the House of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment which I now offer, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the bill at the proper place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the adoption of an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following:

General Land Office: One additional chief of division, at $2,000 per annum, from March 1, 1903, to June 30, 1903, $672.20, or so much thereof as may be required.

One additional chief of division, at $2,000 per annum, from July 1, 1903, to June 30, 1904, $2,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 19, after line 3, I move to insert:

United States Marine Hospital, Pittsburg, Pa.: That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion, upon the application of the Secretary of the Treasury, to transfer to the custody and control of the Treasury Department as a marine-hospital site so much of the United States arsenal grounds in the city of Pittsburg, Pa., as may be required for that purpose, not exceeding 5 acres in extent, fronting on Pennsylvania avenue, Thirty-ninth and Fortieth streets.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT], providing for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York on the west side of Eighth avenue, etc., to report it with an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, has just reported an amendment relating to the post-office building at the city of New York. If the amendment be offered now, I will consent that it may be considered. It will come in on page 17, after line 8.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I offer the amendment to come in on page 17, after line 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 8, insert:

For the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York on the west side of Eighth avenue, and running from Thirty-first to Thirth-third streets, $2,000,000: Provided, That the power of the commission created by section 13 of "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, extended so as to enable them to purchase said site.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in respect to this amendment. What is known as the public-building act, passed in 1902, provided in section 13 as follows:

That a commission hereby created, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General of the United States, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in the city of New York, borough of Manhattan, and State of New York, upon which to erect a fireproof building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office in said city: Provided, That the site selected shall be bounded on each side by a street. When said commission has acquired a site in said city, as herein provided, the commission shall make a report to Congress, stating the location, dimensions, and cost of the same, and recommend to Congress the character and size of a building that should be erected upon said site and state the probable cost of such a building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches.

There was in section 13 no appropriation made. This commission have reported that they have selected and procured a site that will cost $2,000,000. I see the Senator has added a proviso to the amendment authorizing the purchase of a site. I do not think that is necessary under section 13, but it will do no harm.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The reason why I added the proviso was the commission recommended it, having some doubt as to whether under existing authority they have the right to complete the purchase. I ask, if the Senate please, that the report of the commission may be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to have it read.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana what other methods of acquiring land the Government has in the city of New York except by purchase or condemnation. The section read "by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what the word "otherwise" might mean.

Mr. MCCOMAS. It might be done by devise.

Mr. GALLINGER. Or gift.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Maryland propose that the United States shall get the post-office when somebody leaves it by devise or legacy?

Mr. HALE. Occasionally there are donations. That is the usual language.

Mr. ALLISON. It is very rare, however, that there are donations.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there was a limit of the cost fixed by the original act?

Mr. ALLISON. There was not. I have read the section of the act to which the amendment applies.

Mr. BERRY. Then this is not an increase of the limit of cost of the building?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not, as I understand it. If it had been I should have made a point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 8, insert the following:

For the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York on the west side of Eighth avenue and running from Thirty-first to Thirty-third streets, $2,000,000: Provided, That the power of the commission created by section 13 of "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, extended so as to enable them to purchase said site.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS subsequently said: In connection with the amendment, I ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting the report of the commission authorized to secure a site for the erection of a post-office building in the city of New York be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that a document presented by him relative to the amendment be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The document is as follows:

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the commission authorized to secure a grant for the erection of a post-office building in the city of New York. February 24, 1903.—Referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 24, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith the report of the commission authorized by Congress to secure a grant for the erection of a post-office building in the city of New York.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

The commission created by Congress and "authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise a suitable site in the city of New York, borough of Manhattan, State of New York, upon which to erect a fireproof building for the use of the United States post-office in said city of New York," beg leave to report to Congress as follows:

Very few sites have been offered at a definite price; many have been suggested to which title could be secured only through condemnation proceedings. The commission visited the city of New York and inspected the several sites proposed. It is deemed proper to state the reasons governing the commission in reaching a determination.

The location of the city of New York upon the island of Manhattan creates a city long and narrow, congesting the business within narrow limitations and presenting a very unique problem in expediting and properly transacting the postal business of the city. In determining a location for the new post-office building the expedition of the mails is of greater importance than the location of the building in a sightly or conspicuous place.

On an average more than half an hour is lost in transporting the mails to or from the railroad stations to the post-office. To save this half hour or more would be of incalculable benefit to the business interests of the city, and the location of a building or buildings over the tracks of each of the two great railroad systems, the Pennsylvania and the New York Central, would abolish the necessity of transporting the mails in wagons from the railroad stations to the post-office and from the post-office to the railroad stations. Having this idea in mind, negotiations have been entered into with the respective managements of the railroad companies mentioned, and we are able to report material progress.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has offered to sell to the Government a site extending on Eighth avenue from Thirty-first to Thirty-third streets, with a frontage of 460 feet on Eighth avenue and with a depth of 640 feet on Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets, and on the west line of which a street could be made, thus complying with the provision of the law that the site selected shall have a street on each of its four sides. The actual floor space of a building on this site will be 145,000 square feet to each story. The railroad company has acquired title to nearly all of the land in question, and when title is acquired to the small remaining portion the aggregate cost to them, it is stated, will be about $4,400,000. The price named by the company to the Government is $2,000,000, subject to the use of the company for tunnel or trackage purposes underneath, which track location is the factor taken into consideration by the commission in selecting this site. Owing to recent appreciation of property values incident to the location of the Pennsylvania Railroad terminals, an equally large and eligible site adjacent to the one offered would now cost probably $6,000,000.

If this plan should be adopted and the post-office building located upon this site, the mail cars carried by this company (which, it is estimated, convey to and from the city of New York over 40 per cent of the mail received and dispatched) will pass immediately under the post-office, thereby permitting the mails to be unloaded directly from the mail cars to elevators running to the floors of the post-office building and doing away with the necessity for wagon service.

The commission believe that a post-office building should be erected by the Government on a site to be secured over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, at or adjacent to the new station to be erected by that company, and an informal proposition looking to such an improvement has been received.

We recommend that Congress extend the powers of this commission so as to enable them to purchase the site offered by the Pennsylvania Railroad, also to obtain the right to erect a post-office building over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad system, at or adjacent to their new station, thereby securing the expeditious handling of the mails tributary to that locality and mails received or forwarded over the lines of that company. It is estimated that at this time the mails transported over the lines entering the New York Central Company's station amount to 50 per cent of the aggregate for the city of New York, the Pennsylvania Company, as above stated, carrying over 40 per cent, which proportion, it is expected, will be increased when their new terminals are completed.

We recommend, therefore, the appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York on the west side of Eighth avenue, and running from Thirty-first to Thirty-third streets, and that, in addition, this commission be authorized to purchase, or otherwise acquire, a site in connection with the new terminal of the New York Central Railroad Company.

Owing to the widened street on all sides and the large court in the center, the light will be unusually good, and its very large ground area will render it unnecessary to extend the building very high. A suitable building, worthy of the city, can be erected for about $5,000,000. In view of the fact, however, that the proposition to sell includes the excavation by the grantor, it will be unnecessary and perhaps inadvisable to make the appropriation for the building at this session. If the plan proposed by your commission shall be carried out, which includes connecting the three principal post-offices in the city by pneumatic tubes, as Station H is now connected with the main post-office, the problem of handling the mail in this most important city will have been solved for many years to come. The commission attaches hereto copies of the proposition to sell, and a letter from the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company explanatory of the same.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1903.

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Philadelphia, February 16, 1903.

DEAR SIR: The Pennsylvania Railroad Company hereby offers to sell to the United States Government, for a general post-office in the city of New York, the plat of ground situated between Eighth and Ninth avenues and between Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets, as shown in hatched lines with red borders upon the inclosed plan, containing 145,000 square feet, and the ground for a driveway at the west end of the said plot 30 feet wide and extending from Thirty-first to Thirty-third street, containing 13,600 square feet, for the sum of $2,000,000. The conveyance of the land to be in fee, subject, however, to the following conditions and reservations:

First. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company to have the right to occupy for station purposes all the space under a plane 20 feet below the curb line of the adjoining streets, subject, however, to the right of the Government to erect the supports required for its building, which shall be so placed as to permit the company to occupy the ground below with tracks and platforms. The company to further agee that it will excavate at its cost the entire space down to the track level, and that it will build the necessary retaining walls to support the adjacent lands, and will thus leave the ground—which at this level is rock—ready for the erection of the supports of the Government building.

Second. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company to further agree to reserve all the areas colored in yellow on the plan and containing 132,500 square feet for the purpose of affording light and air to the Government building, and to keep such areas free from any structures except roofs of steel and glass to protect the platforms and tracks, which shall be so constructed and of such height as not to interfere with the Government's full enjoyment of said open space for light and air; the Government further to have the right to bridge the outer areas wherever necessary to give access from the street to its buildings, and to bridge the inner area to give means of communication between different parts of the building if it so desires.

Third. The Government to agree that if it should ever cease to use the building and should desire to sell the land, the Pennsylvania Railroad Company shall have the right to purchase it at its market value at that time.

Yours, truly,

A. J. CASSATT, President.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Philadelphia, February 16, 1903.

DEAR SIR: In endeavoring to arrive at a fair valuation of the ground offered to the Government in the formal proposal made to-day we have been governed by the following considerations:

The land comprised within the two blocks between Thirty-first street and Thirty-second street and between Thirty-second street and Thirty-third street and between Eighth avenue and a line parallel with and 160 feet east of the east line of Ninth avenue contains 256,000 square feet. Of this the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has purchased 198,256 square feet, at a cost of $2,895,752.12, an average of $14.606 per square foot.

There remains 57,744 square feet to be acquired by purchase or condemnation. Assuming the average cost of this will be 33⅓ per cent above the cost of the land already bought, or $19.475 per square foot, would bring the total cost of the property yet to be acquired to $1,124,564.40.

The cost of that part of Thirty-third street comprised within the plot to be conveyed, at the average price per square foot which is to be paid the city of New York upon the vacation of the street, comes to $315,456.

To this must be added the cost of dispossessing tenants and legal expenses connected with condemnation proceedings, say $100,000.

Making the total cost of the property within the above limits $4,435,772.52, or $15.05 per square foot.

Assuming that the value to the Government of all the space included in the plot which would be covered by its building and above a plane 20 feet below the street level to be two-thirds of the value of the fee free from the subsurface easement, and it seems to us that this is a very favorable estimate from the Government standpoint, since it leaves the company to pay one-third of the value of the whole for the use of the subcellar space only, would make the value of the 158,650 square feet to be conveyed to the Government $1,591,894.10.

To this must be added the value to the Government of the areas reserved for light and air, and if in dealing with this we reverse the proportions and charge against the Government's purchase one-third and against the company's two-thirds of the cost of these areas, would make the Government's proportion (132,550 square feet, at $5.017) $665,003.33.

Total value of Government's purchase, $2,256,897.45.

You will observe, therefore, that in naming the price $2,000,000 we are well within the actual cost of the property to the company upon the above basis.

If a lesser frontage along Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets will be sufficient for the Government's purpose, the price can be proportionately reduced.

We expect to be in position to commence the work of excavating this plot of ground by or before July 1 next, and to have it ready for the Government to commence its building by July 1, 1904.

Yours, truly,

A. J. CASSATT,
President.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to recur again to the provision respecting the building south of the Capitol. I understand that some one has understood the amendment I offered to mean that the whole text was stricken out. My intention was—and I thought I so stated—that the language restored was that which related to the building south of the Capitol, and not to the eastern extension of the Capitol itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator look at the bill, on page 89, and state exactly how far the amendment extended?

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed the clerks at the desk had understood it; but I will state again that the clause from line 12, on page 89, down to and including line 3, on page 91, is restored.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment proposed by the committee striking out that clause is disagreed to; but nothing is done in relation to the next amendment, commencing at line 4, on page 91?

Mr. ALLISON. Nothing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was not so understood at the desk. Then the amendment to strike out that portion of the bill from line 4, on page 91, to line 2, inclusive, on page 92, is agreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment is agreed to, and was agreed to. I asked only to reconsider the amendment of the committee striking out that portion of the bill which relates to the building south of the Capitol.

Mr. BERRY. That amendment was agreed to with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, before this matter passes, I want it clearly understood that the action of the Senate in striking out the House provision from line 12, on page 89, down to and including line 3, on page 91, has been reconsidered, and the provision in the bill as it came from the other House stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was reconsidered, and the language stricken out has been restored.

Mr. HALE. And agreed to with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Agreed to with two amendments.

Mr. HALE. What are the two amendments?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment originally suggested by the Senator from Maine, and also, in line 2, on page 91, after the word "building," to insert "for the House of Representatives;" so as to make the provision relate to that single building.

Mr. HALE. That is the designation?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. HALE. How as to the clause from line 4, on page 91, to line 2, inclusive, on page 92, for the extension of the Capitol building?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Striking out the provision?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I made the inquiry because the report has been made, and I think that some of our friends outside have got the impression that all of these clauses had been agreed to with an amendment. There can, however, now be no question about it.

Mr. ALLISON. There ought not to have been any question about it at any time, because I stated distinctly that I wished the amendment of the committee striking out the provision as it came from the other House, relating to the building south of the Capitol, to be disagreed to, so as to let the clause stand.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

In order to provide for the treaty obligations imposed by article 9 of the award of the tribunal of arbitration constituted by treaty of Washington February 29, 1892, and made by the arbitrators at Paris August 16, 1893, the said review and acquisition of authentic data thus ordered to be made by and under the direction of the Secretary of State, $20,000, the same to be made immediately available.

Mr. FORAKER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that upon the suggestion that that amount may be necessary, I have inserted $20,000, instead of $10,000, as I originally intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], which I understand has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, shall be inserted on page 160, after line 5. That portion of the bill relates to the State Department, and the amendment will properly come in at that point.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa, and that order will be made.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. On page 160, line 5, I move to strike out the word "fifty," before the word "thousand," and insert "one hundred;" so as to make the appropriation conform to the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 160, line 5, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifty," and insert "one hundred;" so as to read "one hundred thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I wish the chairman of the committee would tell the Senate what, if anything, has been done with the proposition that was presented providing for a commission to be appointed by the President with reference to establishing—I think I may call it—an exchange touching the parity of silver and gold. I desire to know what has been done with that proposition. I was absent yesterday in committee considering the naval appropriation bill, and so am not fully informed; otherwise I should not now be intruding on the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the amendment referred to by the Senator from Maine was adopted yesterday, it having been reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. It was an amendment providing for the establishment of a rate of exchange between silver-using countries and gold-using countries.

Mr. HALE. I have the amendment now, and it reads:

To enable the President to cooperate through diplomatic channels or by the appointment of a commission, or both, with the Governments of Mexico, China, and other countries—

That is the world——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Japan" was inserted after "China."

Mr. HALE. That was not needed, because "other countries" included Japan and every other country under the sun—

for the purpose set forth in the message of the President and accompanying notes submitted to Congress January 29, 1903, and printed as Senate Document numbered 119, second session Fifty-seventh Congress, $100,000.

Before this matter passes from the Senate, I want to call the attention of Senators to it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely want to ask whether that amendment has already been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted to know whether that amendment is now being proposed or whether it is already in the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the bill.

Mr. HALE. The amendment is in the bill, but it is still open.

I want to call the attention of Senators, and especially of certain old Senators, to the attitude which the Senate has taken very clearly in reference to the practice, which the Senate reprobated, of selecting members of this body for appointment on commissions to negotiate treaties which are to be reported to the Senate.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] will very well remember that upon an occasion where the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] had been appointed upon an important commission, to be confirmed by the Senate, the Senate declined to confirm the nominees upon the ground that it would not further consent to the selection of members of this body to negotiate important treaties that were to be reported to the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to inquire what reference he has made to me?

Mr. HALE. I think it was a commission that dealt with questions and subjects in Hawaii, where I think the Senators visited the islands and made a report. They had been appointed by the President, to be confirmed by the Senate; but so strong was the feeling in the Senate, upon the statement of the case and the ill effects of this practice, presented by the senior Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senate declined to confirm them, and they never were confirmed.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator is mistaken about that. I do not think that question ever came before the Senate. We were merely the President's appointees.

Mr. HALE. The names were reported to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] was chairman of that commission, and he can state about it.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the law required that the nominees should be reported to the Senate, and that the Senate should act upon their confirmation, which it never did.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. I recall the circumstance very distinctly.

Mr. MORGAN. We went out as the personal representatives of the President, as I understood it.

Mr. CULLOM. We went out by appointment of the President; but there was a doubt about it, and the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, in view of the doubtful attitude which we occupied as receiving appointments from the President while being members of the Senate, thought it best not to act upon our confirmations at all; and they were not acted upon. We never were confirmed by the Senate, as a matter of fact.

Mr. HALE. I have stated, Mr. President, what is the fact. At that time the senior Senator from Massachusetts also stated that the Judiciary Committee had in mind, and proposed at some time to submit to the Senate, a bill prohibiting the practice, and I do not want this proposition to become a law in the encouragement of that practice.

I raised no question the other day when the President, rather closely upon the action of the Senate, appointed a commission to consider and negotiate with British and Canadian commissioners upon the northern boundary.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Alaskan arbitration commission?

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is the one; that is the tribunal; but I made no objection, for the reason that the names of its members do not come before the Senate for confirmation and because personally I could have no objection to the gentlemen selected upon it. I knew well enough that it was a tribunal to which our interests could be intrusted, and that there would be no yielding and no giving up, as there has been in times past, to the claims of Canada and Great Britain. No question was made about that tribunal.

But I want here and now to enter my protest, expressing the view that was unanimous in the Senate when the matter came up in relation to the Hawaiian Commission—I will not say "unanimous," but there was a general expression that way—and then it was not because there was the slightest objection to the Senators upon the Commission, for nobody could object to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. They had not sought the appointment, and they performed the duty, as the Senator from Illinois suggests to me, without receiving any compensation for their services, which, of course, they could not, and which Senators do not, beyond their salary as Senators. There was no objection whatever to those appointments; but one commission after another follows. After the feeling which the Senate then showed in a very marked way—the senior Senator from Massachusetts, who is in his seat, will recall how he brought the matter up at that time—I hope some attention will be paid in the future to the attitude which the Senate has taken upon this subject.

I should not want upon any of these matters that a selection should be made of Senators in this body to act and appear in this body advocating the adoption of a treaty which they themselves negotiated, representing the Administration, and I call the attention of the Senate to this for the purpose of recalling the attitude the Senate took at that time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has called attention to what many Senators consider an abuse. We all recollect at the time of which he speaks that an amendment was proposed, and almost unanimously carried through this body, to prohibit such appointments in the future, but, for the reason that it was considered a reflection on the appointments then pending, it was thought proper to reconsider and withdraw that amendment.

We have just had, as the Senator from Maine has said, another exhibition of what the Senate considers as improper in the appointment of two Senators to consider the Alaskan boundary treaty, with which they will have afterwards to deal as Senators.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not two Senators.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER] will not then be a Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, there are two Senators all the same. I am speaking of the principle rather than of its particular application. Nobody is opposed to these gentlemen acting, because we feel that the interests of this country will be perfectly well safeguarded in their care, but it is the policy of the thing to which I object.

We had the Paris treaty or the Spanish or Philippine treaty negotiated by Senators, whose votes, no doubt, were influenced by the fact that they were on that commission. I do not see why we should palter with this thing any longer. Probably we can not convince the Executive that this practice is improper and contrary to the will of the Senate unless it is forbidden by law, and I propose to now offer an amendment to come in at the end of the amendment already adopted. I move to insert:

Provided, That in making appointments to any such commission no Senator or Member of the House shall be eligible.

I will send the amendment to the desk and ask for a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where is the amendment which the Senator offers to come in?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is an amendment to the amendment which was adopted yesterday, as I understand, in regard to this commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Strictly under the rule that can be done only in the Senate, the amendment having been agreed to. The Senator may, however, ask unanimous consent to now offer the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not matter when I offer it, so that I come within the rule. I will ask unanimous consent now, or wait until the bill gets into the Senate, when the amendment will be in order.

Mr. McCOMAS. At this stage I object.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to the amendment being considered now, if it is to be considered at all; but I sincerely hope that the amendment will not be adopted. I do not expect to receive any appointment of that character while I am in the Senate or afterwards, for that matter, so I am not speaking from any personal interest; but I do not think that Senators and Members of the other House ought under any and all circumstances to be absolutely prohibited from serving on such commissions. There may come a time when the President in a wise discretion would do well to appoint some Senator on a commission, as I think the President did do well to appoint Senators on the Paris Peace Commission, which has been referred to. I do not think we ought to shut the door against that being done under any circumstances, as this amendment would do. I think the discretion of the President in that matter can be trusted. Certainly there is not any objection to a Senator serving on such a commission after his term of service in this body shall have expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course not.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not like the practice of Senators being selected for that kind of service. I think we are entitled to their services here in this body, and we ought to have the benefit of their services here; but what I object to is not calling attention to it, for I think that will have a good, healthy effect, but I object to absolutely prohibiting the utilization of the services of a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives, because we know there are instances when they will be of inestimable value and when their services would be of more value than the services of anybody else who could be found.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as this amendment was reported by a unanimous vote of the Finance Committee and adopted by the Senate on my suggestion, perhaps I ought to say a word, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

In my judgment there is no possibility of any Senator being appointed on any commission connected with this business. There certainly is no member of the Committee on Finance who would serve on the commission, and I have no idea that this question has any practical importance or value. Of course I am not in the secrets of the President and I have no idea as to whom he would select; but I am sure, especially after the expressions which have been made here this morning, that under no circumstances would he appoint either a Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives upon that commission.

I am myself, however, unwilling to see the Senate undertake to restrict the Executive power of appointment by an amendment of this kind, and I hope the Senator from South Carolina, in view of the fact that there is no practical question involved, will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this matter was quite carefully considered in a former Congress, and I think the judgment of the Senate has come to be practically unanimous upon the subject of the impropriety of the appointment of Senators or Representatives to any other position than that which relates strictly to their legislative duties. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, is present, and of course is best capacitated to speak upon what occurred in reference to the subject under a resolution introduced by himself and considered by the Judiciary Committee. So I shall not now undertake, as he is present, to recite what did occur and what was done in pursuance thereof; but if the Senator from Massachusetts will relate it, it will cast great light upon the attitude assumed by the Senate and especially by the Judiciary Committee in reference to this matter.

I only rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of particularly calling attention to the fact that, however correct the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] may be as to the desirability upon certain occasions that Senators should serve upon any of these commissions, it is distinctly in opposition to the express policy, if not to the express command of the Constitution of the United States. The policy of the Constitution and the design of the Constitution is that no man occupying a seat in this Chamber or in the other House shall exercise any other function in the shape of an office under the Government. So far as it may be technically an office, that is distinctly and positively prohibited. The only possible escape from the prohibition is to say that a position on one of those commissions is not an office. But whether it is or is not technically an office, it is distinctly in contravention of the policy which is declared by this prohibition which I now read to the Senate. In Article I of the Constitution, in the second paragraph of section 6, there is this provision:

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time—and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

I say Mr. President, that the only escape from that as a distinct, direct prohibition is the technical position that a place on one of those commissions is not an office; but even if there is that escape from the technical prohibition, there is no escape from the broad, unambiguous expression of the policy of the Constitution, that no man holding a seat in this Chamber shall hold any other position under the Government.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not wish to debate the subject which is now before the Senate; but since it has been said that there was almost a unanimous view of the Senate that there ought to be some law passed prohibiting the President from making these appointments, I desire to say that I have never shared in that opinion of the Senate, if it has been an opinion of the Senate. I do not think we ought to pass any law limiting or prohibiting the President in his appointments in such cases. I do not believe there is any danger whatever of the abuse of it; and circumstances might arise under which, in my judgment, it would be not only proper, but almost necessary, to appoint a member of the Senate or a judge to take part in such deliberations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has been made to its consideration at this time. The Senator can offer it when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a few words on the subject which has been under discussion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this proposition, I think, will not result under any circumstances in the appointment of any Senator as a member of this commission if such commission should be authorized. I do not believe that a commission can be of any service for the furtherance of this project, which is to establish a fixed relation, as near as may be, of exchange between the silver-using countries and the gold-using countries of the world. It is not possible, as I understand this plan or scheme, that anything can be done by means of international agreement. Whatever is done must be done after this matter has been thoroughly considered by the individual action of independents states. For example, if Mexico shall desire to have the standard of gold with a silver circulation, she must do that domestically; she can not do it very well in accord with other nations, because it will be necessary for her to change her laws as to the coinage of those metals.

So I believe whatever is done under this paragraph will be done largely by diplomatic methods and not by means of a commission. I believe it is a feasible thing to do, and that it can be done to the great advantage of silver-using countries and gold-using countries. It seems to me that diplomatic methods are the wisest and best to accomplish this purpose, but the Committee on Finance believe that it might occur, in the course of this procedure, that a commission might be needed for the purpose of securing concert of action among the various nations, and therefore this paragraph was inserted. I think it will do no harm.

I am in sympathy with the general suggestion made as to who should go upon the commission. I do not believe a Senator or Representative should be appointed, nor do I believe there would be any purpose anywhere to make such an appointment. So I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw his amendment and allow this matter to rest as it was reported by the Finance Committee and as already agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senators who say that this commission, if appointed, ought to be made up of persons outside of the Senate and the House. I do not think it is worth while or perhaps quite right for us to pass a provision of this kind. A day or two ago the President sent to us for service on a commission, for which I did not myself vote and which I regret we are going to have, the names of two Senators. I am sure nobody will claim that they were unfortunate appointments. I do not believe he could have done better than to take the Senator whom he took from this body and who is to remain here and the Senator who is to go out on the 4th of March to handle that subject. I was very much opposed to the commission; I was very much afraid of it; but I am very much less afraid of it to-day than I was the day it was passed. And if I had the power of recalling those two appointments I am sure I would not do it. I think I could show in a very few moments why these two appointments from this body are especially good, but I will not attempt to do it now. I presume the whole Senate will recognize that fact. There are times, undoubtedly, when the President may exercise a discretion in matters of this kind, although as a rule I think the practice is reprehensible.

I doubt very much whether in some classes of cases the position does not rise to the dignity of an office, and whether the appointment of Senators or Members is not absolutely prohibited by the Constitution. But I am not so much worried about the question of the appointment of Senators as I am about the question as to who will be appointed if this commission is created. This question is one of the very greatest importance. It is one which, I think, a great many people for many years have foreseen would confront us. In importance it is only secondary, perhaps, to the question what shall be our own treatment of the two metals.

These two powers, Mexico and China, with whom we trade, have both felt the difference in value of the two metals, and I know very certainly myself they have been suffering because of it for some years. To such an extent do they feel it now that they have appealed to us to do something to establish, if possible, the par of exchange between silver and gold using countries.

I do not know whether we shall be able to do anything in that line or not. I have great fear nothing will come out of the attempt to establish a stable rate of exchange, although I think I can see how it might be done. But I know that the condition of the financial world is such that the theory which some of us have advocated for the treatment of gold and silver on a ratio established by law is not now attainable. If we could secure the recognition of silver as the coequal of gold on a ratio to be established by a great, powerful nation, or by a consensus of opinion in the world, we could secure the stability of exchange between the gold and silver using nations of the world; but we can not hope for that. I can see a good many ways in which we might try to establish stability of exchange, but I am not sure we can do it. I doubt very much whether we shall succeed in doing it to the extent of establishing a stable rate of exchange. Great Britain has been able to do it with India, but for one country to do it for her own possessions using silver, and using gold in another part of the globe, and for the world to do it are two different things. It is worth trying.

The President should try it first, in my judgment, through the diplomatic agents of the Government. I believe that is the proper method, and if it fails and seems to lag and not to be coming to a termination speedily enough, then the President might try it by a commission. But there ought to be no haste about this matter. It is a big enough question to take time over, and I think if this thing is properly handled it will take the Government a year or two before any valuable progress at least is made.

I only hope that when the President feels convinced that he needs a commission, which he may, there will be no such thing as favoritism; there will be no such thing as picking out a man because he is a friend of somebody; but that the question will be, What are his qualifications to act in one of the greatest efforts made in many years to bring about a commercial condition that will be productive of value to the commercial world, that will benefit the exporter and the importer alike?

It is not a question any more of currency. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said that undoubtedly Mexico will have to arrange that for herself. But Mexico may be able to arrange it in conjunction with other powers who also agree to it, and what ten powers may do, Mexico might not be able to do alone. Therefore this effort should not be confined to Mexico and China and Japan, but should take in the whole commercial world. So I have some hope of success, because of the great danger that comes to us as an exporting nation. I think it is the exporting nations that are threatened by this dislocation of the par of exchange between silver-using and gold-using countries. It is not China that is now being disturbed. It is this country. It is Great Britain. It is not Mexico. She may be temporarily embarrassed, but the great evil will fall upon the people who produce and who are looking to the markets of the world. To-day two-thirds of the human race are using silver as the paramount money, and by a hereditary tendency and by the conditions are incapable of using gold, and silver must remain for many generations, if not always, the primary money of a great portion of mankind. When silver will go, as it has gone since I have been in this Chamber, from one dollar and——

Mr. DUBOIS. One dollar and twenty-one cents.

Mr. TELLER. Silver, when I came to the Senate, was 8 per cent below the mint value. It was 5 per cent below the market value two years previous. It has now gone as low as 46 cents an ounce, as against $1.33 an ounce, which the world was paying for it in 1873.

You can see the condition of the man who wants to send goods to China or Japan or, on the other hand, of the man who wants to send goods from China or Japan to this country. We are the greatest export nation of the world, with an export trade that is bound to increase and an import trade which, if we are wise in our affairs, is bound to decrease in proportion, at least, to the growth of the country, and therefore we, of all the people of the world, have an interest in this matter.

I think, therefore, the situation is so threatening that it should have most careful consideration. It is not a silver question, but a commercial question, and we have so much interest in it that if any commission is ever to be appointed it should be composed of men who, above all other men, are the most capable of handling the subject, without reference to where they live or what they may believe politically or otherwise.

Mr. President, I have said this because I find that there are some people who have not looked into this matter who have an idea that back of it is some latent purpose of reviving the silver question. Nobody expects to revive that now. Nobody who is intelligent at all upon this subject sees in it a silver question. I repeat, it is a commercial question which is to affect our exports and our imports and our trade with the world.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have taken very great interest in the question raised by the proposed amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, and I hope he will take an opportunity, or that some other Senator will—if nobody else does, I shall, if I can get one—to bring up this question of the appointment by the President of Senators and Representatives in the other House for important public functions under circumstances where it can be carefully and thoughtfully dealt with as we should deal with a proposed amendment to the Constitution, or as we should have dealt with it if we had been in the Constitutional Convention in the beginning.

It is evident that it can not be so dealt with to-day. There is no time for a full discussion. It comes up on a measure to which it is hardly germane after the statements of gentlemen who are likely to know what is expected, that there is no thought or probability—the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] corrects me by saying "possibility"—of individuals being taken from either House of Congress for this commission. So I hope the matter will be brought up at some time when it is not entangled in the least by personal considerations in regard to our colleagues or gentlemen in the other House who may have been asked to do such service, and will be dealt with solely as a broad general principle for the future.

Mr. President, a great many years ago a President of the United States—I am not sure whether it was in President Hayes's time or General Grant's or a little later—was called upon to make up a commission to go to Europe to deal with the silver question, and he appointed on that commission—if I may be permitted to say so—the one man in this country who was fitted for that duty. That was the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], now chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I took the liberty then of expressing my feeling of anxiety that that act might grow into a precedent and be the occasion of public complaint.

Later, in President McKinley's time, there were some eight or ten appointments made from this body of a like character, and they were, I suppose, appointments that the whole country regarded as most admirable for the public service. They were men who had studied the subjects with which they were to deal, men of great capacity, and that they were men of the highest quality of personal integrity it is unnecessary to say.

But I have no doubt it seemed to a large majority of the Senate, on reflection, that the practice had better not go further, and two measures were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary—one a general law, the other a resolve of the Senate. The committee carefully considered them. It happened that there were three members of the committee at that time who had been among those who had been selected for such functions. The committee almost unanimously agreed to a resolution disapproving of this practice. One or two of the members thought the President ought not to be restricted in his resources for that branch of the public service. However, the committee thought such a resolution might be construed into some discourtesy to the gentlemen who had acted in such places. One of the men who was then acting as a commissioner under such an appointment was one of the most zealous and emphatic in favor of the resolution. He said he had accepted the place hastily, and he agreed that the practice ought not to go further.

But the committee thought it was not best, under the circumstances, to report the matter at that time, and instructed me to call upon the President and tell him what had happened and say to him that the committee hoped the practice would not be continued. I suppose there is no indelicacy in my reporting what happened. President McKinley said he was aware of the objections; that he had come to feel them very strongly; and while he did not say in terms that he would not make another appointment of the same kind, he conveyed to me, and I am sure meant to convey to me, an assurance that it would not occur again. But he said it was impossible to understand how few people there were in this country, who were out of the Senate and the House who were qualified for important diplomatic service of that kind; that we had to contend with the trained diplomats of Europe, men who had studied the subject all their lives. He went over some of the difficulties he had encountered in making selections of ministers abroad for some very important matters that were expected to be dealt with. Our people come from entirely other service and conditions. He might have added what is an additional strong consideration, that we have to deal with nations who can wait, while in general our political conditions and diplomatic condition are such that we can not wait.

The American people want to have a question settled and have it over. Great Britain says to us: "Well, if you do not come to my terms I will be here fifty years hence, and my minister of foreign relations very likely will be here twenty years hence, and we will wait. We are in no hurry."

But at the same time, in spite of all those considerations, it seems to me it is a violation of the sound principles of the Constitution as enunciated in the clause read by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The Constitution says the President shall not have patronage enough at his command to give a Senator, during his Senatorial term, a $20 a year post-office in his country seat, where perhaps he is the only man who resides there receiving letters. During the term for which a Senator is elected he can not be appointed to any place which has been created or the salary of which has been increased by sixpence during the whole six years.

So careful were the framers of the Constitution of Executive influence and control. And yet if the practice is to go on the President may come into the Senate, pick out a half a dozen of our members and send them to Europe, where they spend the summer in the most honorable positions on the face of the earth, meeting the society of foreign capitals, and then he can pay them out of the contingent fund at his disposal a sum three times greater than our salary. Now, does anybody suppose the framers of the Constitution would have approved of that? It is the question of the relation between the legislative power and the executive power. There were two things of which our fathers, when they framed the Constitution, were especially afraid. One was corruption in office—and that was provided for by impeachment—and the other an Executive influence over legislation.

Mr. President, it seems to me at some convenient time we must have this matter out and have it settled so far as an act of Congress can settle it. At the same time I wish to say there is not, in my judgment, the smallest criticism to be made of the purity of purpose and patriotism of the gentlemen who in the past have been selected by the Executive for these various offices.

Take the late Senator from Minnesota, now unhappily withdrawn from the sphere of public service. It would be difficult for me to put into words an expression of higher esteem for the Senatorial character as exemplified by any man with whom I have ever served than by that intelligent, brave, patriotic, and courteous man, so accomplished and delightful in every relation of life, a great citizen, a great soldier, a great Senator.

It is only when the President is forced to say, "The Senator I want to employ is the fittest man in the world for the service, and I can not find anybody else," that it will be done this year or has been done last year or will be done next year. But if the practice is once established it will be done as a matter of course. Senators can not accept an office, but they can do something which has ten times the power and the distinction and the compensation of an office, and a measure can be carried through, if we ever have an unscrupulous Executive, by the knowledge that Senators are to be appointed to discharge the functions. It seems to me that hardly a more dangerous practice can be conceived of than this one.

I hope the question as to what the Senate think on this subject or what they seem to think by their votes will not be determined on a mere amendment coming in at the close of a session, when we can have no extended debate upon it, and on a bill which is not especially germane and to which it practically has no relation.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the proposition for a commission to fix, if possible, some rate of exchange in order that trade may be unembarrassed between silver-standard countries and gold-standard countries is too important in itself to step aside to consider mere collateral questions. The silver question in this country was disposed of by the output of gold. The stringency which resulted from the demonetization of silver continued for nearly twenty years, but conditions have changed. From 1896 until the present time the output of gold has far exceeded anything known in previous history, and the purchasing power of gold has diminished about 30 per cent—that is, general prices, as compared with gold, are 30 per cent higher than they were seven years ago. Hence, so far as this country is concerned, it is idle at the present time to discuss the remonetization of silver, for such discussion will not interest the people so long as the present output of gold continues. While we have enough of either gold or silver, or both, as a basis, the money question will not be entertained by the people.

I do not rise, therefore, to discuss the silver question. But trade between gold-standard countries and silver-standard countries is vastly important. It is true that international trade is conducted by the exchange of commodities. There is no international money and never was. Money, outside of the jurisdiction where it was created, is but a commodity, but by common consent a parity between the money of different countries has been and may hereafter be maintained. Trade between gold-standard countries is unembarrassed because by the mint laws of the United States and Europe each country will pay substantially the same for gold which the others do. Consequently when we sell American commodities in Europe for their money we know what their money is worth as compared with ours. Our gold money will not circulate in Europe except as a commodity, but inasmuch as the value of that commodity is fixed by the mint laws of the various countries of Europe there is no embarrassment to trade. The mints of the silver-standard countries fix the value of silver, which answers every purpose of trade between those countries, but the people of the gold-standard countries will not take silver in trade at the price fixed by the mints of the silver-standard countries.

If the gold-standard countries, by compact or agreement, will take the silver of the silver-standard countries at a fixed ratio to gold, such an arrangement, so long as it could be maintained, would pave the way to unrestricted commercial intercourse between the gold-standard countries and the silver-standard countries throughout the world. There would be no fluctuation so long as such an arrangement could be observed. It is not probable that much, if any, silver would be sent from the silver-standard countries to the gold-standard countries for sale as a commodity, because the silver-standard countries have no more silver than they require. But if the value of silver in those countries was fixed at a certain ratio with gold, exporters from Europe and the United States to Asia, who sell their products in Asiatic markets to buy silver with which to buy Asiatic commodities, would know the value of silver for which they were exchanging their own commodities.

Such an arrangement would be beneficial to all concerned, and there would be no interest on the part of any country to disturb it, unless the silver-standard countries should export more silver to the gold-standard countries than would be required for consumption there. Such a result would be very improbable, because the gold-standard countries require much silver for manufacturing purposes and for subsidiary coin. Besides, the silver-standard countries would be reluctant to export their silver to a cheaper market than their own so long as they had any other commodities for export.

Much confusion exists in the public mind upon the question of international money, because people do not generally reflect that international trade is not carried on by international money. The French people do not buy American goods with French money, but they sell their products, whatever they may be, and buy American money, and with American money buy American goods. It is the same in dealing with silver-standard countries. We sell them our products for silver and with the silver buy Asiatic goods. But the trouble is, when we sell our commodities for silver without an established parity of exchange we do not know what that silver will be worth in American money. If there could be a ratio fixed by international agreement between gold and silver standard countries, everyone dealing in silver money would know its value as compared with gold.

I repeat, there never has been international money, except for a time under the arrangement of the Latin Union. France, Italy, Greece, and Belgium agreed that the coin of each country should circulate at par in all the other countries who had entered the agreement. Trade from time immemorial was accommodated by a fixed ratio between gold and silver throughout the world by the mints of all civilized countries. But since the gold-standard countries have refused to mint silver, its value in exchange constantly fluctuates, and such fluctuations are most disastrous to trade. There is no doubt that the gold-standard countries can maintain the parity between the coin of the gold-standard countries and the coin of the silver-standard countries without opening their mints to the coinage of silver. All that is necessary for the gold-standard countries to do is to agree to take the commodity silver at a fixed ratio. No inconvenience could possibly arise from such an agreement, unless the ratio was so high as to induce the exportation of silver from the silver-standard countries to the gold-standard countries. But it is believed that the ratio might be so fixed that no more silver would be imported by the gold-standard countries than was actually required for use there.

I am glad that an effort is being made to arrive at some basis which will unembarrass trade between gold-standard countries and silver-standard countries. The United States is now becoming a great exporting country, and the people are looking to China, Japan, and India for a market for their surplus products. This does not involve the silver question. We do not suggest that the gold-standard countries open their mints to the coinage of silver on any terms, but as long as the output of gold continues and the price of property advances, there is not the slightest danger of injury to the money or prosperity of the United States from an international agreement fixing the parity of exchange.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to say a word only. I know the Senate is weary of this discussion. I am sure that this amendment ought not now to be adopted. But having listened for four years to these arguments against appointment by the Executive of men in either House of Congress upon diplomatic commissions, the arguments made here against such appointments have confirmed me in the opinion that the objections are not sound or wise, nor are they in the public interest.

This amendment is intended to restrict the power of the Executive in making appointments. Some years ago I was in the House of Representatives when a message came from the President vetoing a measure providing for an appointment to an important office because, as the President said, Congress had attempted to name the officer to be appointed by the President.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCOMAS. I hope the Senator will wait a moment until I finish the proposition I am stating. Then I will yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I merely wanted to say——

Mr. McCOMAS. I will yield presently. I want to finish the proposition I have started to made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, if the Senator declines that ends it.

Mr. McCOMAS. The argument of Attorney-General Bristow made plain, I think, to every intelligence that there was no power in Congress to thus restrict the power of the Executive in appointments.

Now, this amendment does not amount to an invasion of the right of the Executive as does a direct nomination in a bill to name a man for an office, but so far as it goes it restricts the power of the Executive to make appointments. It names a class of people whom he may not appoint upon commissions or name for office, and if you exclude class after class you still further restrict the power of the Executive in making appointments.

I think that the amendment as amended by the Senator from South Carolina is a worse practice, because if we do this we hedge around the Executive, narrowing the wide field of appointments according to his Executive discretion and within his Executive power.

And what more is it proposed that we shall do by this amendment? There are now about to go out of the House of Representatives perhaps 100 members of Congress, many of them highly trained in special matters, well fitted to aid the service of this Government. Some Senators retire at the end of this session, many of them competent and specially fitted to do special public service.

By this amendment we say that those members of Congress and those Senators, when they have returned to private life, shall be debarred from consideration by the Executive. We have no right to say so to the Executive. He is not bound by it if we do say so; but if he is, what is the result?

I saw yesterday the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] send to the clerks' desk the credentials of his successor, after thirty years of service on this floor, experienced, able, just, and wise as he is, better fitted than any man in this body, under this roof, or on this continent to be a member of such a commission as is provided for by this amendment from the Finance Committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. Allow me a moment. After the 4th of March he will be a private citizen. The Senator from South Carolina I am sure would regret to exclude the President——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will permit me, he did not get the import of my proviso, because we could not undertake to deal with private citizens. Any Senator who leaves this body becomes a private citizen immediately; any member of the House who retires becomes a private citizen, and they would not be reached by the amendment.

If the Senator will allow me, while I am on the floor—I have been trying for half an hour——

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me for five minutes? I have been trying to say thus much for an hour and a half, and I should like to conclude.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then if the Senator will simply confine himself to a discussion of what my amendment proposes instead of giving it an import which it does not have, of course I will not interrupt him.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will convince the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not before the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it is not before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate has been going on by unanimous consent.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then, Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to finish the few remarks I want to make. I rarely speak, and I now speak upon this matter, which has been discussed for an hour and a half by unanimous consent.

If this bill should be passed to-morrow and should be signed by the President and he should appoint a commission under this act, then every one of these retiring members would be excluded by the operation of the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. President, I want to say that the Senate is not unanimous in this opinion I have listened to, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has said. Men like these should not be excluded. I have heard on this floor to-day and at other times gentlemen who object to the appointment of Members or Senators upon commissions say that in every case within their recollection the appointment has been the wisest and the best, and that the men who had been named were in the particular instance and for the special service eminently qualified, and the best they knew in their experience.

What does that mean? It means that by restricting the appointing power of the President you will time and again compel him to take second-best men for special service, to take men who are not trained, experienced, and eminent, when he needs the best trained, the best equipped who may happen then to be in Congress. And in the words as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts of the late President McKinley, the President has his choice confined to too few who have special knowledge, experience, or training.

At another time, Mr. President, for I am now speaking by unanimous consent——

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator one question? Does he not remember that some time ago a bill was passed which prohibited Members and Senators from being employed by the United States as counsel? Did the Senator approve that bill?

Mr. McCOMAS. I approved that bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is the distinction?

Mr. McCOMAS. There is a very great distinction.

Mr. HOAR. Would the Senator approve an amendment of the Constitution which would allow the President of the United States to make my honorable friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who would be a most able man, Secretary of State for six months, with the permission of the Senate?

Mr. McCOMAS. I would not.

Mr. HOAR. What is the distinction between the appointment of a Senator to argue a case in representing the Government—in other words, appearing for the United States—and paying him $5,000 and appointing a Senator for six months during a difficult period as Secretary of State?

Mr. McCOMAS. I would do the very thing, but——

Mr. HOAR. What is the distinction?

Mr. McCOMAS. I would do the very thing that the Senator from Massachusetts wants done, but I would do it in a different way. I would try to arrange it that if the distinguished, wise, and eloquent Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] should be Secretary of State he should have a seat on the floor as a member of the Cabinet. I would have all the members of the Cabinet have seats on the floor. Until you have such a measure in our Government here we must do what governments do who have their cabinet on the floor; we must continue to give the right now and then to the Executive to appoint men upon this commission or that, that the action of the Executive may be known in this body, and that men who have thus performed the service may be interrogated here and the best results may follow. The best results have always followed such selections.

Mr. President, I have been gathering some of the data on this subject, and at another time I will undertake to show that what is here reprobated by Senators has been done by the best Presidents of the United States. I will undertake to show that when it was done every case has been one in which the country has been benefited. And looking over the field here that followed the action of the Executive, it was the wisest and the best for the country at that time. I will undertake to show that the early Presidents, who helped make the Constitution and who knew best what it means—that Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Lincoln, Grant, McKinley, and Roosevelt, among the best and greatest and foremost Presidents in the long line of our Executives, have been compelled to resort to this practice, and always with gratifying results. The Senate now would reprobate what the best Executives have done, and in the same moment say that what they did was best for the country and the men they named were the best men in the country for the special service for which they were chosen.

Why, then, should we by resolution of the Senate or by action of Congress compel the President to take second-best men for delicate and peculiar service? I think there is no basis for this punctilio. There is no reason for it. There is no good policy in it. We should continue to let the Executive take the choice of the whole field, and, as we can not name the men he appoints, let him remain free to select fit servants from the whole field and not be restricted by the action of Congress to certain classes, by our excluding certain other classes.

At another time, Mr. President, I will undertake to show that our greatest Presidents appointed Senators and Members on important missions in temporary service, saving extra salaries, thus using the fittest instruments and to the honor and glory and the best advantage of our country.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the statehood bill has been pending in this body and under discussion since the 10th of December, and it seems to me that the Senate ought to be now ready to vote upon it. I would be glad to have a vote if no Senator desires to address the Senate upon the pending bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I can not consent to a vote being taken. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], as the Senator from Pennsylvania will remember, has the floor and has not concluded his remarks, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] also. The Senator from New York is ready to proceed any time. He is absent at this moment, perhaps downstairs getting his lunch.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to the bill going over if the Senator from New York will resume his remarks after his lunch.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill may go over.

Mr. QUAY. Until after lunch.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall object to taking the bill up at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is up.

Mr. QUAY. It is up.

Mr. CULLOM. It is about to be laid aside; and when it is I shall object to its being taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. QUAY. I was about to ask unanimous consent. I have the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to ask unanimous consent, and then I will yield the floor.

Mr. QUAY. I have the floor; and I will yield in one moment.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator wishes to ask unanimous consent, I will not interfere with him.

Mr. QUAY. I wish to ask unanimous consent that at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon a vote be taken upon this bill, and upon amendments now pending and which may then be offered, without further debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that to-morrow afternoon at 2 o'clock the final vote be taken upon this bill, and on all amendments then pending and on amendments then offered, without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I regret that I can not oblige the Senator by consenting.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the regular order may be informally laid aside that we may complete the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending bill be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

[For speeches of Mr. KEAN and Mr. DEPEW see Appendix.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the discussion we have had I am sure is not a fruitless one, and I would not proceed any further but for the fact that I want to make it very clear; and especially I speak thus because of the utterances of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS], that in what I may have said by way of criticism of this practice and the amendment which I have offered I had no purpose or desire or intention or suspicion even to block any appointment that might be on foot under it. I did not know of anything of the sort; I did not suspect anything of the sort, and therefore I did not have any purpose of preventing any scheme of appointment which might be agreeable to some Senators.

I was dealing with the general subject as it had been illustrated or brought out in the very forceful speech of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and after the expression of opinion and the assurances we have had in regard to this matter I intended never to press this amendment in the open Senate, and I do not now. It was ruled out of order, or rather it was thrown out of order, by the objection of the Senator from Maryland, and as I did not intend to renew it in the Senate the discussion might have ended some time ago.

The Senator from Maryland, however, undertook a little while ago (and I want to say to him he is not the best lawyer in this body, if he did teach law in the Columbian University) to say that the amendment which I had offered would prevent the President from appointing those perfectly well qualified men who are now going out at the other end of the Capitol, and some of them at this end, into private life. I will read it for his benefit, to show him that he did not catch the remotest idea from me of that kind:

Provided, That in making appointments to any such commission no Senator or Member of the House shall be eligible.

Does the Senator undertake to say that that would block any member who has been beaten in the last election and who will return to private life?

Mr. McCOMAS. Is he not still a member of Congress?

Mr. TILLMAN. But this does not become a law until it is signed. This bill has to go to conference. Congress expires next Tuesday. Unless there is a scheme on foot to have a junketing tour by somebody whose name has already been selected out, there is no possibility that this commission will be appointed within five or six days. Therefore if the Senator knows of it or if he is willing to make any confession I will listen to him.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCOMAS. I think the bill might be signed to-morrow, and therefore these men would be ineligible. But I am always ready to admit that I am a better farmer than the Senator from South Carolina and that he is a far better lawyer.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, you had better claim that, rather than admit it. Anyhow, it is very clear that none of the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned who are now retiring to private life would be embraced in my amendment after the 4th of March. Certainly the President, if he had any desire to honor any of those or get their valuable services, could wait until next week.

I do not intend to press this amendment, Mr. President, simply for the reason, as I have said, that this discussion is very fruitful; and if the President of the United States gives any attention to our proceedings here, he very clearly understands that a large number of us, if not an overwhelming majority, think that this is a bad practice, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, it ought to be stopped by law if it can not be stopped by a clear understanding on the part of the Executive that the Constitution rather prohibits it. The Senate does not like it, and the country has millions of voters who are ready to serve on this commission who are just as able and patriotic as we are.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment, to come in on line 20, page 88.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of line 20, page 88:

Provided, That hereafter it shall be unlawful to sell or otherwise deal in beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors within the limits of the Capitol building or the grounds appertaining thereto.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order that that is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not insist upon the point of order. It seems to me that this is a mere regulation of the affairs of the Capitol. We have already a rule of this body which prohibits the sale of or dealing in liquor at this end of the Capitol, whereas in another place it is dealt in and used openly and, as I think, greatly to the detriment of the general conditions of the Capitol.

As I said, I think this is a mere regulation and that the Senator ought not, under all the circumstances, which he thoroughly understands, I think, insist on the point of order on so simple a piece of legislation as this.

Mr. ALLISON. There have been, there are now, and there will be many opportunities to deal with this question. This is an appropriation bill and not a bill providing for legislation, and I insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 137, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War, through the Commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to improve the road from Crawfish Springs, Georgia, through the Widow Davis's Cross-Roads and Bailey's Cross-Roads, to Stevens Gap, a distance of 12 miles, $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAY. One moment. Will the chairman of the committee permit me in just a minute to have read a letter?

Mr. ALLISON. If it is a brief letter, certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to state that the reasons why this appropriation ought to be made are fully and clearly stated in a letter from the chairman of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park Commission, and that this appropriation has also been approved by the Secretary of War. I ask that the letter be read. It is a very short one.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA
NATIONAL PARK COMMISSION,
Washington, January 3, 1903.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the historical importance of the road from Crawfish Springs to Stevens Gap in connection with the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, I have the honor to say that this was the road over which and along which the main operations of the Union Army preceding the battle of Chickamauga took place, and which is indicated upon the map herewith inclosed by dotted lines in blue, the distance being 12 miles.

The corresponding road over which and along which the operations of the Confederate army took place previous to the battle of Chickamauga is indicated upon the map by the red line on the east side of Pigeon Mountain, extending from Lee and Gordon Mills to Lafayette, a distance of 13 miles.

As the line of the preliminary operations of the Confederate army has already been improved, it would seem entirely appropriate that the corresponding line of operations of the Union Army should also be improved. These preliminary operations of both armies were of an exceedingly interesting character and had most important bearings upon the results of the campaign.

In view of the annual maneuvers which are now contemplated from the national park as a general rendezvous for portions of the Regular Army and the National Guard of most of the States south of the Ohio and the Potomac and east of the Mississippi, it would seem advisable to have one important road along the main line of both Confederate and Union operations. The completion of the line now in question would accomplish this. This would leave various unimproved branch roads running from these main lines of operations into the numerous theaters of detached engagements, and thus leave abundant lines of rough roads for practice over ordinary country lines of travel.

The right of way over this road has already been ceded to the United States by the State of Georgia. It is believed that this road can be completed for the sum suggested in your proposed amendment.

Very respectfully,

H. V. BOYNTON.

Hon. ALEXANDER S. CLAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to state that when this amendment was introduced it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and by the Committee on Military Affairs referred to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War has approved the recommendation of General Boynton. The amendment was referred to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] as a subcommittee and the Committee on Military Affairs made a unanimous report in favor of the adoption of the amendment; and, as I stated, when it came back to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I do not know why the Committee on Appropriations rejected it. I exceedingly regret to know that they did. It has been approved by the Secretary of War, it has been approved by the Committee on Military Affairs, and the reasons for its adoption are fully set forth in the letter which has just been read.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this is a road to be built in a State outside of the park at Chickamauga. It is the beginning of the construction of numerous roads leading into national parks. It is pure legislation, it was not estimated for, and I make the point of order against it on both those grounds.

Mr. FORAKER. When this matter was considered in the Committee on Military Affairs we were given to understand that the title to the ground over which this road passes is in the United States.

Mr. CLAY. That is correct, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. We did not recommend the amendment without carefully considering it. It had the unanimous report of that committee. This is a part of the ground that has been ceded to the United States, and is a part, and a most important part, of that military reservation or park, whatever we are to call it.

It is, as the letter of General Boynton has stated, the road over which the Union forces operated in connection with that battle. It was used in the preliminary operations. I do not know to what extent the money is to be expended for the improvement of that battlefield, but it seems to me that this is a most important part of it, and it seems so to every member of the Committee on Military Affairs. We had only one opinion about it.

I do not understand that it is the entering wedge to the expenditure of money for the improvement of roads generally, but that it is a very appropriate expenditure of money, if we are to make any improvement there at all. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

It seems to me, in view of what we have done, that this is not new or general legislation, and that the point of order made by the Senator from Iowa can not properly be made against it.

Mr. CLAY. This amendment has been approved by the War Department.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the fact that the State of Georgia has dedicated this road to the United States gives us no jurisdiction. I will be responsible for the dedication of a great many roads to the United States if the Government will construct them.

We have a number of national parks, and a number of propositions are pending to build roads from different places to those parks and from those parks to various other places. We have expended, and are expending, a large sum of money for national parks; and to go outside of their limits certainly requires legislation.

This is not a new matter. It has undoubtedly been before the Committee on Military Affairs during this entire Congress; it was perfectly competent for that committee to originate legislation for this purpose if they had regarded it as important and pressing, and there will be an opportunity in the next Congress to do so. Therefore I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I may be misinformed or in error in what I said, and if so, I wish some Senator would correct me. I understand the State of Georgia has done more than merely dedicate this road; that it has made an absolute cession of it as a part of that territory to the United States. That is my information.

Mr. CLAY. I will state, Mr. President, that I went over this matter most thoroughly with General Boynton before I introduced the amendment. I carefully examined the act of the Georgia legislature making this cession, and if there is any question about it I desire to say that I can send and get a copy of the act.

This road has been dedicated by the legislature of the State of Georgia to the National Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it been accepted by the National Government?

Mr. CLAY. A right of way over this road has already been ceded to the United States by the State of Georgia. Not only is General Boynton in favor of making this appropriation, but the Secretary of War is in favor of making this appropriation. This road is essential to the completion of the work in connection with the park, and it has been recommended by the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

I am sure, Mr. President, that it is not simply opening the way to appropriations to build roads disconnected with the National Government and with the work of the National Government.

I know that the chairman of the committee wants to be just. This matter has been referred to the proper Department, to the Secretary of War, and I repeat he approves it. General Boynton, in charge of this park, approves this work, and the Committee on Military Affairs unanimously recommend this appropriation. So, Mr. President, it does strike me that the amendment ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McCOMAS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, as recommended by him, to purchase a site for a depot for the Revenue-Cutter Service at Curtis Creek, Maryland; and for this purpose the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ALLISON. That is provided for, though not specifically named in the bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. Then I withdraw the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I move the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 111, after line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 111, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That the Commissioner of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to collect and report to Congress the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia since January 1, 1887; and to enable him to carry out this provision the sum of $25,000, to be available until exhausted, is hereby appropriated; but should this sum not be sufficient the Commissioner of Labor is authorized to complete the investigation under the regular appropriations for the Department of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask now, pursuant to the notice I gave last night, that the Senate proceed for a few moments to the consideration of unobjected House claims bills on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to call up a conference report, which I was not able to call up when it first came over from the other House because of my absence from the Senate? It will take but very few minutes.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator would defer asking me to yield. I suppose the conference report will have precedence; but I hope I may be recognized as entitled to the floor after the presentation of the conference report.

Mr. CULLOM. My purpose in rising, Mr. President, was to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was recognized. Will the Senator restate his request?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to make this statement: I gave notice last night—which, of course, I understand is not absolutely binding on the Senate—that I would move this morning, after the close of the morning business, to take up unobjected House claims bills on the Calendar. There are a half dozen or more of those bills—less than a dozen in all—none of which is a page long, and the whole amount they involve is not more than $25,000. Unless they are passed immediately it will be useless to take up these bills at this session of Congress, because there is hardly time even now for the Executive to refer them to the various departments and receive answers therefrom. I hope I may be permitted to dispose of these small measures without further delay. It would probably not take longer than ten minutes—certainly not fifteen—to pass such as are unobjected to.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not know whether my motion takes precedence over the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] or not; I think it ought, perhaps, but I am not familiar with the rule on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Illinois made a motion?

Mr. CULLOM. I attempted to do so, and if I have not already done so, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator let me have a minute further?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish to have it distinctly understood, so far as the bills to which I have referred are concerned, that if we are going to let them go over now, then, of course, we have laid them aside for the session, and I shall not consider that it is my duty as chairman of the Committee on Claims to again call them up or to undertake further to secure their passage. Especially so since the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has instructions by the unanimous vote of a caucus of Democratic Senators to antagonize these and other bills with some so-called trust bill. So I think it is fair to assume, if no further work is done by the Claims Committee and no claims bills passed, the responsibility therefor will rest on the other side, and I will expect relief from the pressure almost constantly applied from that side of the House for consideration of their claims bills.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the ratification of the Panama Canal treaty is more important than the claims bills to which the Senator from Wyoming has referred.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I am going to make a motion in my own right. I want to raise the question of consideration, Mr. President, and in order to do it, I want to say that our experience for the last three months proves conclusively that the Senate does not intend to permit a vote upon the unfinished business which is now before the Senate, known as the omnibus statehood bill, in the shape that it came from the House of Representatives.

Under instructions unanimously given me by the Democratic caucus of the Senate, I now move, Mr. President, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 17, Order of Business 3030, known as the Littlefield antitrust bill, as amended by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably, and now upon the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I think the motion to go into executive session takes precedence, and I insist on that motion.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a conference report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have the floor, Mr. President, and I do not know how I have been taken off of it.

Mr. HOAR. By a conference report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to add that I do not propose, if my motion shall prevail, that the consideration of the antitrust bill shall interfere in any wise at any time with any appropriation bill or with the consideration of the treaty.

Mr. CULLOM. We will go on with the treaty, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is constrained to rule that, pending the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] can not be entertained.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has a Senator no right to raise the question of consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not in the Senate of the United States, as the present occupant of the chair understands the rules.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Further inquiring for information upon that parliamentary question, Mr. President, is it true, or does the Chair hold it to be true, that the Senate by a majority vote may not at any time, in its own discretion, exercise its preference as to what measures shall be taken up for consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate can do that by voting down the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, and then a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill will be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I respectfully submit the question.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist on my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. KEAN. Is that motion debatable, Mr. President?

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of higher privilege than the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I give notice that, as soon as this matter is disposed of, I shall continue to renew the motion to take up what is known as the Littlefield antitrust bill at every possible opportunity.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I call up the conference report on the bill for the protection of the President, and ask that it be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I made the motion some time ago that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has asked that a conference report be considered pending that motion. Whether that is in order or not I am not able to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. I understand a conference report takes precedence of a motion for an executive session or of any other motion. It is in the power of the Senate after the conference report is laid before the body to raise the question of consideration, in which case it is not compelled to go on with that business, but I claim that it is well settled that a conference report takes precedence of other motions, even to take a Senator off the floor in the midst of debate. I hope the Senator will not drive us to that extremity. I have been obliged to be absent from the Senate, otherwise I should have felt it to be my duty to present the conference report three or four days ago.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, if there is to be no discussion of the conference report, I will withdraw the motion for an executive session to enable the Senator to bring it in. I want it understood, however, that as against anything else I shall insist upon my motion.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I ask for a roll call, as I question the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BURTON. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A call of the roll, the want of a quorum having been suggested.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Platt, Conn.
Alger,	Deboe,	Kean,	Platt, N. Y.
Allison,	Depew,	Kearns,	Pritchard,
Bacon,	Dillingham,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Bard,	Dryden,	McComas,	Rawlins,
Bate,	Dubois,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Berry,	Fairbanks,	Mallory,	Simon,
Blackburn,	Foraker,	Martin,	Spooner,
Burnham,	Frye,	Millard,	Taliaferro,
Burton,	Gallinger,	Morgan,	Teller,
Carmack,	Gamble,	Nelson,	Vest,
Clark, Mont.	Hansbrough,	Patterson,	Warren,
Clay,	Harris,	Perkins,	Wellington.
Cullom,	Heitfeld,	Pettus,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present.

The Chair determines that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] could present his conference report, and that it would take precedence of the motion to go into executive session. The question of consideration would be one which could be raised, and then must be determined without debate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to use the authority, if there be any, of a conference report to interfere with what the Senate wants to do about this matter. I suppose there is no doubt that at some convenient time whoever is in charge of anything going on will see that I have an opportunity to present that report. I want to say that I have heretofore been unable to present it. It came over from the other House last Thursday, late in the evening. I was obliged to leave town the next day for a few days, and was not able, therefore, to bring it up at the proper time. I withdraw my motion for the present.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I ask that the conference report go over, and I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Massachusetts presented his conference report?

Mr. HOAR. I will withdraw it. It may be considered as not offered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I insist upon my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I want to be heard on that motion for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable, and the Senator can not be heard upon it except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURTON. I want to make an inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BURTON. I did not hear the motion fully. Is it a motion to go into executive session for any particular purpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a motion to go into executive session only. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, was agreed to, and ask that the papers in connection with the report be retained in the Senate for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLINGTON in the chair). The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PRIVATE CORPORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following report:

The committe of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 6139) to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

That the title of said act read as follows: "An act amending the civil code of Alaska, providing for the organization of private corporations, and for other purposes." And the Senate agree to the same.

KNUTE NELSON,
HENRY E. BURNHAM,
T. M. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

V. WARNER,
HENRY R. GIBSON,
F. A. McLAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the report be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the report be printed and lie on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I present a conference report on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes. I ask that it may be read. It is very brief.

After the reading has taken place, if any Senators desire to debate it, and I am informed there is such a desire, I will not insist on further proceeding with it at this time. I should like to have it read now.

Mr. BACON. It would not be in order for the Senate to proceed with it except by unanimous consent, as I understand.

Mr. HOAR. I think it would be.

Mr. BACON. Under the rule it would have to lie over.

Mr. LODGE. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts presents a conference report which will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to make an inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will state his inquiry.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to know whether this is the conference report which is being read or the original bill?

Mr. BACON. It is the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the conference report.

Mr. HOAR. The House substituted a new bill from beginning to end containing a great many of the Senate amendments. Then the conferees agreed on a new draft, and that is what is being read. It is the most convenient possible form.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report will be proceeded with.

The reading of the report was resumed and concluded.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3653) entitled "An act for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of said amendment of the House insert the following:

"That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of the President or Vice-President of the United States, or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President have devolved under the Constitution and laws, shall suffer death.

"SEC. 2. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill or cause the death of any officer of the United States entitled under the Constitution and laws thereof to act as President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President while he is engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official duties or character, or because of his official acts or omissions, or who by so killing such official shall cause such a vacancy in the office by him held at a time when, by the Constitution and laws of the United States, it would be the duty of the person holding such office to act as President, shall suffer death.

"SEC. 3. That any person who shall, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously kill any ambassador or minister of a foreign state or country accredited to the United States, and being therein, and while engaged in the performance of his official duties, or because of his official character, or because of any of his official acts or omissions, shall suffer death.

"SEC. 4. That any person who, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, willfully and maliciously attempts to commit either of the offenses defined in sections 1, 2, and 3 of this act shall suffer death, or, at the discretion of the court, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than ten years.

"SEC. 5. That any person who, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the President or Vice-President of the United States or any officer thereof upon whom the powers and duties of the President may devolve under the Constitution and laws, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, or who shall aid, abet, advise, or counsel the killing of the sovereign or chief magistrate of any foreign country, or shall conspire with any other person to accomplish the same, shall be deemed a principal offender.

"SEC. 6. That any person who shall willfully and knowingly aid in the escape of any person guilty of either of the offenses mentioned in the foregoing sections shall be deemed an accomplice after the fact, and shall be punished as if a principal, although the other party or parties to said offense shall not be indicted or convicted.

"SEC. 7. That any person who, within the limits of the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful killing or assaulting of one or more of the officers (either of specific individuals or officers generally) of the Government of the United States, or of the government of any civilized nation, because of his or their official character, or who openly, willfully, and deliberately justifies such killing or assaulting, with intent to cause the commission of any of the offenses specified in the first eight sections of this act, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not less than one nor more than twenty years, or both.

"SEC. 8. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, shall be permitted to enter the United States or any Territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof. This section shall be enforced by the Secretary of the Treasury under such rules and regulations as he shall prescribe: Provided, That no such person shall be allowed to enter as an immigrant.

"That any person who knowingly aids or assists any such person to enter the United States or any Territory or place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such person to enter therein, except pursuant to such rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not less than one nor more than five years, or both.

"SEC. 9. That no person who disbelieves in or who is opposed to all organized government, or who is a member of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching such disbelief in or opposition to all organized government, or who advocates or teaches the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who has violated any of the provisions of this act, shall be naturalized or be made a citizen of the United States. All courts and tribunals and all judges and officers thereof having jurisdiction of naturalization proceedings or duties to perform in regard thereto shall, on the final application for naturalization, make careful inquiry into such matters, and before issuing the final order or certificate of naturalization cause to be entered of record the affidavit of the applicant and of his witnesses so far as applicable, reciting and affirming the truth of every material fact requisite for naturalization. All final orders and certificates of naturalization hereafter made shall show on their face specifically that said affidavits were duly made and recorded, and all orders and certificates that fail to show such facts shall be null and void.

"That any person who purposely procures naturalization in violation of the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000, or shall be imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both, and the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon adjudge and declare the order or decree and all certificates admitting such person to citizenship null and void. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication.

"That any person who knowingly aids, advises, or encourages any such person to apply for or to secure naturalization or to file the preliminary papers declaring an intent to become a citizen of the United States, or who in any naturalization proceeding knowingly procures or gives false testimony as to any material fact, or who knowingly makes an affidavit false as to any material fact required to be proved in such proceeding, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both.

"The foregoing provisions concerning naturalization shall not be in force until ninety days after the approval hereof."

And the House agree to the same.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN J. JENKINS,
JESSE OVERSTREET,
DAVID A. DE ARMOND,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that the report be printed also as a bill. It seems to be a new bill.

Mr. BACON. Yes; it is practically a new bill.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be so printed.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be printed as a bill as well as in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the report may be printed as a bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to make an observation which will take but half a minute. I understand that the rule that a report must lie over for one day does not apply to conference reports.

Mr. BACON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts is correct. I was incorrect in my former statement.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my purpose to ask the Senate to go on with the consideration of the report now, if the Senator from Georgia and perhaps other Senators desire to debate it, and I understand they do.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. The Senator is correct in that understanding.

Mr. HOAR. So I will not ask to have the matter proceeded with further at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 27, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that no quorum is present. The rules require that a quorum shall appear before the Journal is read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count the House.

After the count,

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-one members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER (having put the question). The ayes have it. A call of the House is ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a division.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point of order that the demand is dilatory, and comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had announced the result.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was on my feet in time, but in consequence of the disorder I could not be heard. I demand a division.

Mr. DALZELL. Too late.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is too late, but will entertain the demand.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I could not have made the demand more promptly. I pledge my word——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that he will give the division, although he thinks the call was too late.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question again.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll; those in favor of the motion for a call of the House will vote "aye;" contrary opinion, "no."

The Clerk began to call the roll.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee (interrupting the call). Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is going on at the desk. I ask for order. I could not hear the announcement of the Chair as to the response of members. I understood the Chair to say that gentlemen would vote "aye" or "no." Should not the response be "present" on a call of the House? I want to hear the statement of the Chair as to what the motion is. I could not hear it.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion for a call of the House. Those in favor of the motion will vote "aye;" those opposed, will vote "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 239, nays 0, answered "present" 18, not voting 94; as follows:

So a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. ADAMSON (who had voted in the affirmative). Mr. Speaker, I ask whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WANGER, voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. ADAMSON. Then I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that gentleman, and wish to be recorded "present."

Mr. BOUTELL (who had voted in the affirmative). Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. GRIGGS, has voted?

The SPEAKER. He did not.

Mr. BOUTELL. Then I desire to withdraw my vote and be recorded "present."

The following pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. NEVIN with Mr. UNDERWOOD.
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. BEIDLER with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. ACHESON with Mr. BELL.
So a call of the House was ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with all proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, there were—ayes 137, noes 78.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that is dilatory.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What is the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman demands tellers and I make the point that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays, a constitutional right.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 7, answered "present" 22, not voting 89; as follows:

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. SHALLENBERGER.
Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Indiana [Mr. GRIFFITH] is sick, and I desire to have him excused——

The SPEAKER. These statements are not allowable at this time.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. May I not have him excused for a couple of days?

The SPEAKER. Not at this stage of the proceedings.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Further proceedings under the call of the House are dispensed with. The doors will be opened by the officers of the House. The Clerk will cause the Journal to be read in full.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

During the reading,

Mr. UNDERWOOD said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Speaker to order the Clerk to read the Journal in full. I note that the Clerk has not read the conference report that was ordered to be printed, and should be a part of the Journal as well as the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If the Clerk has omitted any part of the Journal he will correct it by reading it now. The Clerk assures the Chair that he has not omitted a word.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Clerk is reading the Journal, not the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the conference report should be a part of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. That is not the case.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the Journal to and including the statement of the adjournment of the House.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

Mr. PAYNE, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal as read stand approved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the Journal as read stand approved.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Journal has not been read yet.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman point out that has not been read?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The reports of committees on public bills and resolutions, and the presentation of public bills and resolutions, a number of them, which should be in the Journal if they are not; bills that are regularly introduced and referred.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, of course the bills as introduced do not appear in the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why not?

Mr. PAYNE. It would be ridiculous to put them there. They are on the files of the House and they are referred to intelligently in the Journal. I make this motion, Mr. Speaker, for two reasons. One is that there is an evident intention on the part of certain gentlemen in the House to delay the proceedings of the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, well, that is gratuitous, entirely.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon this. It is quite true that these addenda at the close of the Journal have not been read in practice, but the Chair thinks that they are such part of the Journal that they will have to be read if the reading is demanded.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the addenda.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading.

Mr. PAYNE and Mr. RUSSELL rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I renew my motion that the Journal as read stand approved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask if the gentleman will yield for a moment to hear the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for a correction of the RECORD on page 2816.

Mr. PAYNE. Of the RECORD?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. This is the Journal.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, both. The same mistake occurs in both. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER] made a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of House bill 16228. Upon the point of order being made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] that there was no quorum, the Speaker ordered a call of the House and instructed us that those who favored going into the Committee of the Whole House should vote "aye," those opposed "no." Now, I am published in the RECORD, on page 2817, as having voted "aye," when I in reality voted "no." I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD and Journal be corrected so as to conform to this state of facts.

The SPEAKER. That correction will be made according to the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HAY. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish to say a word on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say a word about this objection. In the early history of the Congress gentlemen were not allowed to change a vote in the Journal; but it has become more and more liberalized until it has become an absolute right to have it corrected and has been so treated where he is wrongfully recorded, and so it will be corrected in this case. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAY. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It does not matter in what form he puts it; he gets the facts before the House; and on the statement he is certainly entitled to have his vote corrected.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. As I was saying when interrupted——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to demand the previous question. He certainly can not debate that.

Mr. PAYNE. He has not demanded the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. He did not demand the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Those were his words.

Mr. PAYNE. I was proceeding to debate my motion when the gentleman from Tennessee made his point of order to the Chair that the bills, and so forth, should be read, and I replied to that that there was no rule for the reading of the bills. It seems he meant the titles of the bills as they appear in the Journal. I supposed they had all been read, and therefore made my reply to that suggestion. I have not yet demanded the previous question, but I shall do so; I will inform the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I need no information from the gentleman. I could not get much information from him. Much obliged.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether it would sink in.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would not go to the gentleman from New York to get it, and would be disposed to think that I would be disappointed if I expected to be informed by him.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make this motion for two reasons. As I said before, one is that it appears to be the disposition upon the part of some gentlemen to delay the consideration of matters before the House, and if I did not make that motion I have no doubt but what there would be numerous corrections of the Journal to be made, probably with a yea-and-nay vote, and all that sort of thing. Another thing, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Journal to be correct. Usually we have found the Journal to be correct, and seldom find any errors in it. There seems to be no disposition on the part of any gentleman to question its correctness except in the instance of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the gentleman says the Journal is correct, I want to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not believe that the rules governing this House require conference reports shall be entered upon the Journal?

Mr. PAYNE. In answer to the gentleman in regard to that I will say that the rule provides that conference reports must be presented to the House and printed in the RECORD. The rule says printed in the RECORD. That was done in this case. The rule says the report shall be printed in the RECORD, and then the rule further provides that after it has been embalmed in the RECORD, in twenty-four hours thereafter it may be called up in the House and action had in the House, and when action is taken by the House it appears in the Journal, and that appears to have been done with the conference reports that were called up yesterday. They were brought up for discussion in the House, acted upon in the House, and they appear in the Journal in full, as they should appear. But when the report is simply brought into the House, introduced and filed for the purpose of being printed under the rule, there is no rule of the House, and there is no rule of common sense, that would require it to be entered on the Journal.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let me read one paragraph from the rules.

Mr. PAYNE. No; I do not yield for the gentleman to read the rules. I am thoroughly familiar with them. I now move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. So far as a vote is concerned, the gentleman has consumed ten minutes in debate and proposes to cut off all debate.

The SPEAKER. This is all out of order. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Division.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 46, answered "present" 15, not voting 133; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. PAYNE, that the Journal as read stand approved, was agreed to.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER] vote?

The SPEAKER. He has voted.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I have a general pair with the gentleman.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. BOREING with Mr. FINLEY.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. TAYLOR of Alabama.

Mr. DICK with Mr. FLANAGAN.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. COWHERD.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. GORDON.

Until 4 o'clock:

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. SIMS.

For balance of the day:

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. BURNETT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (having voted in the negative). Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The name of Mr. UNDERWOOD being again called, he voted in the affirmative.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there being an admitted error in the Journal [cries of "Regular order!"], I move to reconsider the vote by which the Journal has been approved.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I wish to state to the Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is dilatory; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the Chair sustains the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that out as dilatory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WADSWORTH (continuing). The Agricultural appropriation bill, to disagree to all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Tennessee hear the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did. We have rules; let us enforce them; that is all. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED].

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WAGONER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. OLMSTED. As directed by the Committee on Elections No. 2, and in the exercise of the highest constitutional privilege, I demand the present consideration of the resolutions reported by that committee in the contested-election case of Wagoner v. Butler from the Twelfth district of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to raise now, or after the resolutions are read—whichever the Chair holds to be in order—the question of consideration. I do not want that right to be waived.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James J. Butler was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-Seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That George C. R. Wagoner was elected a Representative in the Fifty-Seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to raise the question of consideration at this time.

Mr. OLMSTED. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is now, Will the House consider the resolutions just read? The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, but was interrupted by

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, who said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order. I respectfully ask that the Clerk answer after the member votes, so that we may know how gentlemen vote. We have a right to hear how the members vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no such rule.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no rule of that kind.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll in the usual way, in accordance with the custom of the House. The Chair, however, hopes that order will be preserved, so that the responses can be heard.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We have a right to hear.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 109, answered "present" 11, not voting 82; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

So the House determined to consider the resolutions.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. SWANSON.

For the day:

Mr. HILL with Mr. PUGSLEY.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. BELLAMY.

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. SPIGHT.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. LESSLER with Mr. TALBERT.

For the vote:

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. SNODGRASS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. GLASS.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. REID.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. BRANTLEY.

Mr. WACHTER with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. SCHIRM with Mr. THAYER.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. MADDOX.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for one hour.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer and have pending a substitute resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do that when he has the floor in his own right.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] to yield for the usual resolution.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, if it does not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George C. R. Wagoner was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That James J. Butler was elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I will ask to have that considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield, so that the request may embrace that?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, before commencing the consideration of this matter, I would like to ask if it is possible to agree with the gentleman on the other side as to the amount of time to be consumed in the debate.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, considering the issues involved in this case, the minority feels that at least one day should be allotted to it for the consideration of these resolutions.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, they have had three hours now.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to consider this day as devoted to this case, counting the time from 12 o'clock.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, the minority must insist, in the light of the record, which shows a printed copy of some 2,300 pages of testimony, that at least one day is little enough for the minority to have in which to present its side of the case.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I understand that when a similar case coming up from the same city a few years ago was under consideration in a Democratic Congress, the sitting member, Mr. JOY, was allowed twenty minutes. I will now ask the gentleman from Illinois if he will agree to two hours on a side?

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, we can not agree to two hours.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the highest privilege conferred and the highest duty cast by the Constitution upon the House of Representatives is the privilege and the duty of judging of the qualifications and elections of its members. This is necessary for the integrity of its membership and of its proceedings. It has always seemed to me that a question involving a matter of that kind should be approached in a nonpartisan spirit, with fair minds, and a disposition to do only that which is right toward the contesting parties, toward the Congressional district involved, toward the House, and toward the country.

That is the disposition with which heretofore the committee of which I have now the honor to be chairman, and upon which I have served for six years, has approached the consideration of cases of this kind. Some five or six gentlemen upon the minority side of this Chamber to-day hold their seats there because, although in some instances the case was close and we were morally certain, yet because we did not consider that the legal evidence in the case fairly justified a different result, we have permitted them to continue to hold their seats.

I regret to say that while the minority of this committee have usually approached such questions with the same spirit of fairness, in this case there has been manifest from the beginning a disposition to consider it along party lines and not upon its merits. As long ago as in December, when the memorial was presented——

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FEELY. I do not desire to interrupt any more than to get the facts in the RECORD. The gentleman just stated that there was all along——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I yielded only for a question.

Mr. FEELY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he can state that there was ever any partisanship exhibited on the part of the minority until it became evident that the majority had prearranged their report, and had decided to present a report antagonistic to the contestee?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is a proper question, and I am very glad to answer it. There was a partisan disposition exhibited upon that side of the Chamber, not only by members of the committee but by every gentleman upon that side, when the memorial was presented in December, a disposition to prevent the taking of testimony and the consideration of this case at all during the present Congress.

Now, when we came to the meeting of the committee, the minority sat with us until the day was fixed for the final disposition of the case by the committee. The ranking member of the minority Monday evening of this week asked me my views, and I told him very frankly that I had concluded, speaking for myself, as to what result ought to be brought about, but could not say until the committee met what the other members would do. The minority members of the committee absented themselves from the meeting held the next morning to consider the case judicially. Not only that, but one of them, by an attempt to pair with a Republican member, sought to break a quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BARTLETT. I make the point of order, which was sustained yesterday, that it is improper in this House to discuss what occurred in the committee room.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about that point of order. The only difficulty is that I have not mentioned anything that occurred in the committee room.

Mr. BARTLETT. I call for the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania must proceed in order.

Mr. OLMSTED. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania" has not mentioned any incident that occurred in the committee room and does not propose to. He simply said the minority members were not in the committee room, and that one of them, outside of the committee room, in an attempt to pair with a member of the majority, had sought to break a quorum. That did not occur in the committee room.

Mr. FEELY. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FEELY. My point of order is that the gentleman in his argument is assuming something to have been in the mind of the gentleman to whom he refers, or any other member who attempted to pair.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have not referred to the gentleman from Illinois in any way whatever. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we come to the case in hand, the sitting member here was returned at the regular election in 1900 as elected to a seat in this House from the Twelfth district of Missouri. His seat was contested. The other Committee on Elections (No. 1), in an able report by its chairman, reported that there had been such vast frauds, of such an an infinite variety and to such extent, throughout the entire district, that it was impossible to determine who had been elected, if anybody, and therefore declared the seat vacant. A resolution to that effect was adopted by this House on the 28th of June.

The governor of Missouri called a special election, held November 4, 1902, to fill the vacancy, and the gentleman who was then unseated has been again returned. Again his seat is contested, and charges of fraud still more vast in amount and of great variety in character have been made as to 63 precincts in the district, and, in the judgment of the committee, sustained by absolute proof as to 41 precincts.

This Congressional district comprises 116 precincts in the city of St. Louis, and as to 53 of them there is no contest. Both parties agree that there are no such irregularities as would justify a modification of the returns. They are therefore thrown out of the contest, which embraces the remaining 63. The contestant claims that the entire 63 districts ought to be thrown out. The committee has not taken quite that view of the matter, but does throw out 41, for the reason that the frauds permeating the election—the registration and election—in these 41 precincts were so gross, so varied, and so comprehensive and the action of the election officers was such that it is impossible to ascertain the correct and honest vote, if any honest and correct vote was cast in any one of these 41 precincts.

Let me say in the beginning that under the law of Missouri no man can vote unless he is registered. He must appear and register personally under the provisions of what is known as the "Nesbitt law." There is one day in which he may appear personally and be registered in the precinct in which he lives. But all the year round, up to within a short time before the election, registration may be made in the board of election commissioners, of whom there are three, appointed by the governor, in whose hands the entire election machinery of the city of St. Louis is placed under the so-called Nesbitt law. And upon this provision as to registration, which is peculiar to the city, hinges a great deal of this fraud. I shall bring it to your attention.

The law requires that after the register is closed the officers shall sign the official registry sheets so that no more votes can be added. Then they shall be published for the benefit and information of the public. I have here that compilation, containing the sheets published by that official board of elections throughout this entire Congressional district. They have been put together and are certified to. Concerning them one of the election commissioners says this:

Q. I will ask you to examine the book which I now show you, and ask you to state of what that book is made up.

A. This is the complete printed registration of the qualified voters of the Twelfth Congressional district for the election of November 4, and thereafter, 1902.

Q. By whom is it prepared?
Mr. FROMBERG. Is that the official list?
A. That is the official list.
Mr. RICHEY. By whom was it prepared?
A. This list is prepared in this manner: Under the laws the board of election commissioners are required to publish these sheets. They are all separate; they have been attached here evidently for the convenience of the contestant. We are required to publish those sheets singly.
Q. That is, a sheet for each voting precinct?
A. Yes, sir; the verifications being made in the precincts by the judges and clerks; from the verification book prepared by them these sheets were printed.
Q. Then these sheets in this book I now exhibit to you are composed of one sheet or page for each voting precinct in the Twelfth Congressional district?
A. According to the old lines.
Q. That is, the Twelfth Congressional district as the district is made up for the Fifty-seventh (present) Congress of the United States?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were these sheets printed under the direction of the board of election commissioners?
A. They were; yes, sir.
Q. They were published and uttered by the board of election commissioners acting officially?
A. Published and distributed for the benefit of the citizens, acting officially, by the board of election commissioners.
Q. In compliance with the law of Missouri made to cover such cases?
A. Yes, sir. You understand me when I say those are official lists; they are the official published lists.
Q. Yes.
A. The only lists that are published by the board of election commissioners.

This is the book which he identifies. These sheets were published on Saturday before the election.

Now, then, there are on these lists 25,179 names. The contestant caused to be addressed to each name and address contained thereon a registered letter. Of these 25,179 registered letters, 12,608 were returned by the letter carriers with the notation under the name of the party on the envelope "Not to be found at the address given." Here is one of the envelopes. There is the box from one precinct, and our committee room is full of boxes from all the other precincts. On this envelope, Ward 23, thirteenth precinct, the letter carrier's annotation is, "Removed; left no address."

Now, it is a peculiar fact that of these 25,179 registered names, 16,045 do not grace the pages of the St. Louis city directory. Of the 12,608 returned, 4,669 indicated that the party had "removed." That was accounted for by the distinguished counsel for the sitting member upon the theory that the inhabitants of these precincts—located along the Mississippi River, in the lowest part of the city of St. Louis, filled with saloons, bawdy houses, gambling houses, mule stables, etc., to which I shall presently refer—were people of nomadic character—to use his own language, "as migratory as fishes." These cards were sent out on the 17th and 18th of December. Within that period 4,000 and over of these migratory people, as migratory as fishes, had removed. Further evidence in this case shows that the school of fishes to which they belong must have been of the variety known as suckers. Of these 4,669 names returned as "removed," 245 only were in the directory.

Now, I want to say right here that objection has been made that these letters were offered in rebuttal. The fact is that the fact of their having been sent out becoming public, the contestee, Mr. Butler, subpœnaed the person who sent them out, called him to the stand, and took his testimony as to the number sent out, etc., and attempted to impugn his character. The contestee himself, having introduted evidence on that point, proving the sending out the letters and attempting to impugn the correctness of the reports thereon, your committee felt that it was entirely proper for the contestant, in rebuttal, to introduce the whole testimony on the subject.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes, for a question.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the introduction of the testimony by the contestee accounted for the fact that the contestant did not indroduce in chief the evidence which was proper to be introduced in chief?

Mr. OLMSTED. I would say, in reply to that, that if the sitting member had not introduced any evidence on the subject, then for the contestant to introduce it would have been irregular in rebuttal, and probably should not be permitted or considered under all the circumstances of this case. But I wish to say, further, that the committee does not agree with the contestant that the evidence as to these letters is such that we could throw out upon that evidence any votes in this Congressional district. We conceive that it might be possible that a man whose name did not appear in the city directory might yet have been entitled to vote, even though he had removed after election within a short time. Therefore we gave to that evidence no greater weight than to say that, taken as a whole, it did raise a suspicion as to the integrity of the registration in that district.

We proceed further, Mr. Speaker, and what do we find? Why, under the laws of Missouri they keep what is called a poll book. It is kept at the election. It is not what is called a poll book in Pennsylvania or in some other States. It is made up as the election proceeds. The law is very plain. When a man comes to vote, his name and address must be written down in that book, his number written opposite his name, and the ballot must bear that number and be put in the box. The poll books have been put in evidence, and we have them printed in this record, so that every name on which a ballot was cast in that district is printed here. The ballot boxes were opened and the ballots themselves or the record of them appear in this evidence. By referring to the registry sheets we see whether he registered, and from the poll book you can see whether a man was voted or not. By referring to the ballots you can see if the box contained a ballot corresponding to the number of his vote. Now, in regard to this registration, we find some astounding things. I shall introduce evidence, and I may as well do it here, to show how that registration was made. I call the attention of the House to the method of registering. The testimony of Mr. Lambert, page 136 of the record, says:

Q. What is your occupation?
A. Carpenter.
Q. Were you connected in any way with the election held on the 4th of November, in this city, last?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What capacity?
A. Judge.
Q. Republican or Democratic judge?
A. Republican.
Q. Where was your polling place?
A. 1206 St. Charles.
Q. What precinct and ward is that in this city?
A. Fourth Ward, seventh precinct.
Q. Twelfth Congressional district?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you examine or pay any attention to the registration in that precinct?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. State what you did.
A. We opened up in the morning and people came in there and commenced to register. We took them in as fast as they came along. Very few came until about 9 o'clock, and then there was about 15 came up in a bunch.
Q. Did you know any of them?
A. Not by name; only by sight, that is all.
Q. Did you know them by sight before that?
A. I had seen a few of them at the Presidential election, at the time of the canvass for the Presidential election. There was a few of them then there that I remember; one or two of them.
Q. What did they do?
A. They came in there and commenced to register. I objected to one man, and they said—the other judges said—that I couldn't object; we had to put their names down. I said "All right, if that is the case, let it go." They commenced to register and kept on registering. They formed a ring around the table, kind of a circus ring, and kept on going.
Q. The same men?
A. Same men. A few of them went out, but very few. Most of them stayed in there, and they kept on going around. They registered as fast as they could until——
Q. Did they register under different names?
A. Different names.
Q. Did you see them have anything from which they obtained those names?
A. I looked out of the door once or twice; they would have a little list in their hands, a little piece of paper, and look at it, and when their list ran out they would go out on the street and get a piece of paper up against the wall and make out another list and come back again.
Q. Did you take notice of any particular individual who registered more than once?
A. Yes, sir; there was so many of them I picked one out. I thought I would sort one man out and keep track of him, and by doing so I could get a pretty good idea of what the rest of them done.
Q. How many times did this man register?
A. He registered—I got his name three times—he registered 15 times that I know of.
Q. Do you know any of the names he registered under?
A. Yes, I have three names; [referring to card] one is McMullen, one is Byrnes, and one is John Cole.
Q. The other ten or twelve names you didn't get?
A. No, sir. I got those I could; I tried to keep track, but I had to let them fire away.
Q. Did you protest and object to his registration?
A. I objected and protested without getting any answer. They told me I couldn't object.
Q. Who told you?
A. Well, the other judges. They claimed I couldn't stop any man from putting his name on the books. I thought so myself, really. They kept putting their names down as fast as they came along.
Q. Did you canvass or have anything to do with the canvass of the registration?
A. I didn't have anything to do with it at all.
Q. Do you know whether one was made?
A. No, sir; I don't know.
Q. On the day of election did you notice anything irregular that day in connection with the casting of the vote at that precinct?
A. Well, after we had opened the polls a little while, about 8 o'clock, somewhere in that neighborhood, a crowd came in, and I recognized several of them that had registered. I saw this very man that I had sorted out that had registered 15 times, and I noticed him. I would watch him; I had the book, the duplicate book. He came up and told me his name. All right. I let him off once. I let him vote once. He never went out of the door, but he came over there to the table and wanted to vote again. I said, "You have no right to that vote," and he said, "That is my brother that voted." He said, "Vote that name or I'll knock your head off." I said, "You can knock my head off, but I object to that vote," and I turned around to my other judge and I said, "Ain't you going to kick, too? Ain't you going to object to this man voting? He said, "No, I won't;" he said, "I ain't going to get my head broke."
Q. Who was that?
A. That was Mr. Doering.
Q. Is he a Republican or a Democratic judge?
A. Republican.
Q. Was anything said by the Democratic judges?
A. The Democrats said, "Oh, shut your mouth; let the man vote."
Q. How often did he vote?

A. He voted four times and attempted to vote five times, but the name couldn't be found on the books.
Q. Did he give a different name each time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you remember any particular name he voted?
A. I have them all here [examining card]—Thomas Dowling, Henry Ballard, Charles Peters. He voted by the name of Moore, but the initials I didn't get. William Harvey. They couldn't find that name on the book.
Q. That is the name he attempted to vote?
A. Yes, sir. They couldn't find the name.
Q. Was there any other of the men who voted illegally?
A. Yes; the whole push—15 of them there. About 12 or 15 men all the time. They came in and voted just as often as they wanted to—would have been voting yet if it had kept going, I guess.

Now, on the subject of registration, we find a remarkable circumstance. A person would come up, say, from No. 5 North Ninth street, where 30 people were registered from one house, and, singular to relate, they arrived there in exact alphabetical order, except that the W's arrived first, the others letters following in regular order.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I object to the house party going on on the other side. I would like to hear the testimony, and the minority, even if they had no part in the consideration of it in the committee, would like to hear it also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The point is well taken. Gentlemen in the aisles will take their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, in the fourth precinct 24 men registered from 801 North Sixth street in alphabetical order, 16 from 619 Morgan street, 48 from 823 North Sixth, and so it runs on all the way through.

Mr. FEELY. I would like to ask the gentleman what precinct he refers to?

Mr. OLMSTED. I refer to the Fourth Ward, fourth precinct. The gentleman will find it so in a great many instances all the way through. Let me show how these boards are made up. The governor appoints three election commissioners, who have charge of the whole thing. They appoint four judges and two clerks in each precinct, and they have charge of the registration and conduct the election.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OLMSTED. For a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. Are not the judges designated in equal numbers by both political committees?

Mr. OLMSTED. The law requires that two shall be designated by the commissioners; but let me show you how it works. I will convince gentlemen of the House that it is no more impossible to cure a case of smallpox with a Red Raven Split than it is for the Republican judge to secure an honest election in these precincts. Take the first witness who has testified. He was a Republican judge and objected; made the unseemly objection that because a man attempted to vote two or three times without the formality of going out of the room and coming back again, it ought to be stopped. [Laughter.] He objected to eight men coming in at one time when there was only room or booths for three. They finally went out. Then a policeman came in and said: "Here, they say you fellows have arms;" and he searched the Republican judges and the clerks. He then went to the door and shouted to the mob: "It's all right; there is not a gun in the crowd." The mob rushed in and beat those two Republican judges and the clerks into such a condition that they had to be taken to the hospital; and they stole the poll book.

Mr. FEELY. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. FEELY. I ask the chairman of the committee whether he knows of another single instance of violence in the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri on that day?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will state one case, in which the police were effective. In one district, where a gang of repeaters was coming to vote repeatedly, and it was known that they were about to do so—and I will say that the order in which the ballots were cast shows that they did so—a photographer was engaged to put his camera in the stable across the way and photograph them. The clerk of the election testified that the camera and the window sash came out together. One man was found in the stable beaten into a condition of insensibility. The police in that case were effective—they arrested the photographer. [Laughter.]

Mr. FEELY. The gentleman forgot to answer my question. I said that the occurrence described happened over a hundred feet away from the polls, and there is not another single instance of violence in the record.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, there are instances of intimidation and threats of violence all the way through this testimony. When you come to the registration in the so-called Butler mule stables, 110 men were registered as living in one stable. The superintendent testified that they slept there; that sometimes as many as 200 slept there right along. When asked whether they had wives, he said: "You would think they had a dozen wives apiece on pay day;" that sometimes three or four women claimed to be the wife of one man.

We are asked to presume that in that mule stable 110 men—married men—lived apart from their wives and families. That is one of the districts that the minority report complains of our rejecting. They say that our action in doing so was the crowning outrage and infamy of our report.

Now, let me state a little circumstance about that. While the law requires the addresses of the voters to be entered on the poll book, they entered in that precinct just 1 address out of 435. As to 434 you may simply guess where they live. The evidence shows that they made up their poll book two days after the election. Now, when they came to open the ballot boxes there what did they find? Four hundred and thirty-five persons voting, addresses not given; 440 ballots in the box. The following numbers are twice in the box, and counted for Butler: 37, 112, 129, 147, and 15 others. Ballot No. 6 was voted three times for Mr. Butler. Forty-six numbers appear upon the poll book opposite the names of men who are said to have voted, but those 46 ballots are missing from the box entirely. Including all the duplications, there were in the box 347 ballots bearing the name of Mr. Butler; the return judges generously gave him 362. There were found 73 ballots with Wagoner's name on them, and they gave him 69. This is the ward which they say we erred in throwing out.

Now, a word as showing the effect of Republican efforts in preventing false registration. It is shown that in one saloon there were registered 81 men as living there. A Republican canvasser testified that he went there six times without being able to get in; that finally he caught in the hallway the lady who "run the house," and she, being asked, could remember only three men who lived in the house. He reported these facts to the board of election commissioners appointed by the governor. The Republicans made some fuss about it. The commissioners said, "Oh, well, this has got to be signed." They said, "We will compromise with you; we will call it 40." So they called it 40, most of whom voted, and voted for Mr. Butler; and one man voted on seven of those names.

Mr. FEELY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. FEELY. I am endeavoring to the best of my ability to hear everything that the distinguished chairman of the committee has to say. It is impossible for me to hear all he says; but if has said anything concerning any other precinct——

Mr. OLMSTED. I yielded for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. FEELY. I am not making a speech. If the gentleman has said anything concerning any precinct which the minority of the committee were not willing to exclude from the polls, I have not heard it; and I have been listening as closely as possible.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have been discussing the thirteenth precinct of the Twenty-third Ward, which the minority say it was a crowning outrage for us to reject. That it their pet ward—the worst case in the box; I have shown the House the facts. If any gentleman thinks that on this testimony that vote ought to have been counted, he has a very different view of the matter from my own.

Now, I do not think it necessary to consume the time of the House further. I might take up, in addition to this general testimony, the names of people who were called and testified that they did not know and never heard of the people who registered from their houses and voted from their houses. Here is one, Annie Harms, in that very precinct.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman say to this general proposition: After having thrown out fraudulent votes on both sides, what is the outcome?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, we threw out these 41 precincts in which no living man can tell what the honest vote was, or whether there was any honest vote, and it leaves Mr. WAGONER 767 majority. That is the result. The same character of testimony runs all through the record. I will call attention to one further case. It is on page 532 of the record. We find 10 men voting from one house all in a bunch, 6 voting from the next house, 4 from another, 8 from another, all coming at one time and voting in the eighth precinct of the Sixth Ward. Six men appear to have voted from No. 1441 Chouteau avenue, 6 from 1018 Papin avenue, and those six men voted in that precinct four times.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. Is the proof of fraudulent votes confined to the six or eight men in that precinct?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; as the gentleman will find if he will read the report.

Mr. GILBERT. I have not time to read the report. I am asking for information.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; it is not confined to the six or eight men, but it runs all through these 41 precincts.

Mr. GILBERT. And, for example, in any precinct where the proof shows that so many fraudulent votes were polled and no proof at all as to the residue of the votes, then do you throw out the whole precinct?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, the evidence shows such manifest fraud and irregularity on the part of the registration board, on the part of the election boards, and of the election officers, frauds in making up the returns in stuffing the ballot boxes and in robbing them, that it is impossible to tell what is fraudulent and what is not. Therefore we throw out all in pursuance of the well-established rule, which obtains in courts, in Congress, and in State legislatures.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to say that these same offenses, intimidations, etc., permeated that whole district there. I will ask the gentleman if he has read the 2,500 pages of this testimony taken in this case?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I have not read the 2,500 pages.

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman if any member of his committee has read it?

Mr. OLMSTED. I understand that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] has read every page of it.

Mr. RUCKER. When was it filed before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. OLMSTED. As soon as it came up it was sent up in proof—in sections.

Mr. RUCKER. I hope the gentleman will not take any exception to what I am going to ask him——

Mr. OLMSTED. Not at all.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to get at the truth.

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that a forecast of the action of this committee appeared in the St. Louis papers two days before the gentlemen of the committee had this case submitted to them?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for the publication of any paper in St. Louis. I do not read them. I do say, however, that if any forecast appeared it was false, and I will state that the only St. Louis paper I have seen was a Democratic paper forecasting that somebody else was to draw the report and when it was to be made. I want to say to the gentleman that the committee never made up its mind in this case, and I do not believe any member ever expressed an opinion to anybody until after twelve hours of argument had been heard by able counsel who referred to and read all the testimony that seemed essential, and, so far as I am concerned, I did not form my judgment until after I had spent, I am sorry to say, on last Sunday, sixteen hours going over the poll books, returns, and ballot-box records, and no living man knew until I had done that how I was going to vote. I never expressed an opinion as to my conclusion until I expressed it to the gentleman from Indiana, the ranking minority member of the committee, on Monday night before we met to decide upon our report.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman know it was published in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat last week how the committee would report?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know what is published in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and if it was published there it was a false statement.

Mr. RUCKER. And does not the gentleman know that that statement was given to the paper by the attorney for the contestant in this case.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know it, and, Mr. Speaker, I do not care. I decline to have my time taken up by such questions.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I intend to ask the gentleman questions and he may refuse them if he sees proper.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, ask it.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I am going to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Do it promptly or I shall decline to yield.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I will ask it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Very well.

Mr. RUCKER. I understand the gentleman to say that the only member of his committee who has read this testimony is the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. OLMSTED. I said nothing of the kind. I have read every page of it that was essential, every page the attorney for the sitting member thought it was necessary to refer to in the argument of counsel, and everything that is necessary to the determination of the case. I read the 2,300 pages of testimony with great care except such portions as related to Mr. Wagoner's nomination, that point having been expressly waived by Mr. Butler's counsel in his argument before our committee.

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. OLMSTED. And if the gentleman or anybody on that side can refer to anything in contravention of the statements I have read to him I challenge him to do it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RUCKER. I will ask the gentleman if his committee did not give the contestee in this case until 8 o'clock Saturday night to file references and citations?

Mr. OLMSTED. They gave him all the time he wanted, and asked him to file them as promptly as possible if he wanted them to be considered in his case. He never did file them and never intended to file them.

Mr. RUCKER. Did you not announce your determination of this case before the time you had given him had expired?

Mr. OLMSTED. I decline to yield further to that sort of interrogation.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like the gentleman to answer that one question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield. The gentleman from Missouri is out of order.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like the gentleman to answer that question.

Mr. GILBERT rose.

Mr. OLMSTED. I will yield to the gentleman in front of me.

Mr. RUCKER. All right.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to know whether or not there was any proof taken by your committee upon the general proposition as to how that district would have gone in the event that an honest and fair election was held?

Mr. OLMSTED. Why, Mr. Speaker, we did not take testimony before our committee. We took the testimony as it was produced.

Mr. GILBERT. But is there any testimony of that sort?

Mr. OLMSTED. I can only say that in 1898, before the Nesbitt law was passed, it went Republican by about 2,300, but since that time it has been returned the other way.

Mr. COWHERD. It has been redistricted.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not say that has any bearing upon it, but it is a pertinent answer to the gentleman's question.

Mr. VANDIVER. In what other campaign did it ever go Republican?

Mr. OLMSTED. The immediately preceding campaign, if the gentleman wishes to know.

Mr. VANDIVER. What other campaign besides that?

Mr. OLMSTED. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how much time I have remaining.

Mr. VANDIVER. What further campaign besides that?

Mr. OLMSTED. In 1902 it went Republican.

Mr. VANDIVER. No, sir; it did not.

Mr. OLMSTED. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say, without detaining the House longer at this time, that in my judgment——

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. In fairness to the honest voters of St. Louis in this Congressional district——

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. OLMSTED. In fairness to the honest voters in this Congressional district, in fairness to this candidate who has made this manly fight——

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FEELY. The gentleman must yield to a point of order, and that is that we can not hear what he is saying. I know that is not his fault.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is well taken. The House will please come to order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I wish merely to say that we have given this matter the most assiduous and conscientious care and study possible, and that it is my deliberate judgment that the only way to do justice to the honest voters of the Twelfth Missouri district, the only way to do justice to this contestant who has made this manly fight against such corrupt odds, and the only way for this House to sustain its own dignity and the integrity of its membership, is again to unseat this sitting member, who is not entitled to the seat, and to place in it the man whom the honestly declared votes of that district, so far as they can possibly be ascertained, show to be entitled to a seat in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman one question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY] is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield to a question before taking his seat?

Mr. OLMSTED. The Chair understands that I reserve the balance of my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield to one question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY] is recognized.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to offer any suggestions upon this resolution, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what disposition he will make as to time? We of the minority recognize that the gentleman controls the matter.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the inquiry does not come out of my time, I will say that I endeavored to make an arrangement at the outset as to the time, and failing in that, the gentleman will have to follow his judgment.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, the reply of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is nothing more nor less than I had expected. It is an exhibition of the partisanship shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who, looking at the mote in the eye of his neighbor, can not see the beam in his own. When he says that partisanship has been exhibited by the minority in this case since last December, I hurl back to him in defiance the charge that the minority of this House attempted to prevent the consideration of this contest during the present session of Congress. On the contrary, we find that as soon as the memorial of Wagoner was presented to this House, we presented to this House, and you voted down by a partisan vote, a resolution to constitute a committee of investigation to go out to the city of St. Louis and take the testimony according to the rules of law and judicial practice, and not delegate harum-scarum, flotsam and jetsam notaries public to take all manner of irrelevant testimony and pound it into a record of 2,300 pages, and submit it for our consideration two days before action is taken.

It is all very well for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that this testimony has been arriving week by week by sections, and the members of his committee are too fair, notwithstanding the partisanship that has characterized them in this contest, to assert that this evidence was ever presented to any member of this House in a readable shape until last Monday morning. True it is that some testimony came here a week ago last Monday and two weeks ago last Monday—piecemeal it came. It came in undertakers' boxes; it came in every kind of consignment in which it could come.

The committee was called together; counsel were brought in. They were compelled to make their arguments before this committee absolutely without an opportunity of investigating the evidence in this case. They were given but two hours to wander aimlessly through this record, without page, some of it, and without an index to facilitate the finding out of the facts. Mornings and sometimes evenings this committee sat listening to the arguments, besides the duty which a member owes to his constituents to be on the floor of the House from 12 o'clock in the day until 5 o'clock, the hour of adjournment. They had to sit floundering about endeavoring to read some testimony to find the relevancy of any. The argument was concluded.

Members of the committee suggested, "What about a brief?" The ordinary, generally recognized, precedented practice of this House is that a brief of the evidence should be submitted for the consideration of the committee. Ah, no! "The House is about to adjourn." "The Fifty-seventh Congress is about to die." "There is no time to submit briefs, with the application of the law and evidence in this case." "I must get a day in the House," was the cry. A day in the House for the consideration of this report, even before the counsel had concluded the argument in this case. On the day—several days, as I remember it now—before the argument was concluded the gentleman from Illinois and other members of that committee requested the chairman to——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order which was made against me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. FEELY. The gentleman from Illinois requested that evidence should be submitted, and specifications containing the page and the names of the witnesses in the record upon which they believed that certain precincts should be thrown out. That promise was made.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FEELY. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. Of course, this statement is not exactly in order, but it does not matter. Is it not a fact that that request was made before the testimony was indexed, but immediately, the next morning, the whole testimony came up indexed and paged?

Mr. FEELY. It afterwards came. I will say further without reflecting upon the gentleman from Illinois in making reference to what took place in the committee, all these meetings were open, and representatives of the press present, and I do not conceive myself in any way to have violated the rules in regard to stating what transpired in committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield to a question of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FEELY. Certainly.

Mr. PADGETT. I notice that the majority have thrown out 41 precincts, which had given over 7,000 votes for Butler. Was there not a single honest vote in that entire number cast?

Mr. FEELY. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I had never before conceived the idea that the gentleman from Tennessee was a humorist, and as I believe in asking me that question he does not ask for the purpose of enlightening the House, he must take a humorous view, because I assume he has read the report as it appeared in the RECORD, and knows, as every other member knows who read that report, that they could have easily distinguished the wheat and the chaff in this case—the legal votes that were cast for Wagoner and the legal votes which were cast for Butler—and they could have been rejected—the illegal votes cast for each—and a fair result obtained in determining the controversy in this case.

Mr. PADGETT. That is the point I wanted to emphasize, the very iniquity that I wanted to call attention to here, that they have thrown out the whole of these precincts, and say that there is not a single honest vote cast in the whole of them.

Mr. FEELY. Now, Mr. Speaker, so much for the manner in which this committee managed the consideration of this case. I wish to say that there is evidence in the record warranting fairly the statement that this Congressional district has never been carried by a Republican, with but three exceptions, for the last twenty years.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman of that committee, with that nonchalance that makes him distinguished in the House if his great ability does not, stated that this district was carried by the Republicans in 1896 and in 1898. Why, Mr. Speaker, there were, I may say, hundreds of districts that were carried in 1896 and 1898 for the Republican party, and yet not carried by them since that time at either election. Yes; the district was carried in 1896. The Democratic party was proportionately disunited in the Twelfth district of Missouri, as it was throughout the nation.

Colonel Pierce was elected in 1896. He was elected in 1898, and after a service of four years, which I understand distinguished him in this House, he is retired by a Republican machine, and a satrap of no particular ability or entity placed in his stead, and the Republican party asked to support him. They did not support him. There was a contest—and I am not going to criticise the decision of Election Committee No. 1 in the first session of this Congress—there was a contest, and the committee said, in making their report, that fraud was so general in this district on the part of the Democratic managers and on the part of the Republican managers that the truth was not ascertainable therefrom; that it could not be determined who was elected to represent the people of this district in this House, and that they would declare that no valid election had been held, and sent it back to the people for another verdict.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FEELY. I am always delighted to oblige the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The gentleman has stated that the district has never been carried by the Republicans except in 1896 and 1898.

Mr. FEELY. With one exception, in twenty years.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to state that in the Fifty-first Congress, substantially the same district was represented by a Republican, by Nathan Frank.

Mr. FEELY. That is the one exception. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was coming to that place in the history of this case where this House, on the 28th of last June, adopted by a partisan majority, a partisan vote, the report of the Committee on Elections No. 1, declaring a vacancy to exist in that district. The contestee, Mr. Butler, went home to his people in Missouri and was unanimously nominated by the Democratic party of that district for the short term to fill the vacancy caused by his unseating, and as well for a seat in the Fifty-eighth Congress, which may convene after March 4. Then, gentlemen, a struggle ensued for the Republican nomination of this Congressional district.

Two factions contested for the Republican nomination in this district in St. Louis. A man by the name of Reynolds was nominated to represent it for the long term and for the short term. A man by the name of Laffhagen was nominated for the long term and a man by the name of Wagoner, who comes here to-day asking for a seat in this Congress, who had circulated a petition broadcast to be placed upon the ballot, came into the convention which nominated Laffhagen, which represented a faction of the Republican party, and secured what was known as an indorsement, not a nomination, to go on the Republican ticket. Tumult ensued, lawsuits were started, and one great man in the State of Missouri absolutely disemboweled the Republican party in St. Louis, kicked out its central committee, or 20 out of 28 of them, and set up a new committee.

All these questions were in litigation. It was determined, after wrangling and crossing, that Mr. Reynolds was the regular nominee for the long term in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and it is determined, although not legally, however with no objection from the contestee, who was advised of his rights, to place on the Republican ticket for the short term this gentleman, Wagoner, who did not secure the nomination. I will not say to this House that because Mr. Wagoner came into the Republican party by the back door that he was not entitled to be voted for, but I am submitting to them that in their great doubt as to how James J. Butler received 7,000 majority in that district that they take into consideration the fact that he had a man opposed to him who could not, and did not, receive the Republican nomination.

So much for the strength and vote-getting ability of the man whom the majority of this committee says the Republican party selected. But, Mr. Speaker, another view presents itself. The committee in its report criticises the whole territory of 63 precincts which are contested by the contestant in language that ought not to be dignified by inclosure in any official document. Down in any section of any city one would not hear in a campaign for constable, or for member of the lower council of the city, the billingsgate which in the majority report is hurled against the people of the 63 precincts that gave Butler a majority.

Mr. Speaker, I can account for that. There is no opportunity in this case to be completely, wholly, and absolutely consistent with the report of the Elections Committee No. 1. The committee that presented this report would fail in this—that there is no Butler to denounce in the record of this contest. Two thousand three hundred pages of this testimony with not a word about "Butler's Indians" in this contest; not a word about "pernicious activity" of Butler or anyone connected with him in this contest; not a word in the testimony taken before the dignified notaries public; not a word in the argument of counsel.

There is no word of complaint in the words of contestant's counsel that the majority could see fit to dignify by noticing it against the police of the city of St. Louis. The only word spoken against the police was the statement in the argument of counsel, printed with the rest of the report, that the chief of police of the city had issued a general order transferring the police from their regular beats to distant parts of the city. In this respect the counsel for the contestant showed how new, how unsophisticated, how unacquainted he is with the practice prevailing in every city of any decent size beyond that of a hamlet, by showing surprise at the sending of the police to different parts of the city from that which they had been in the habit of traveling on their beat.

If that view of counsel is correct, then the present President of the United States must be criticised for his conduct when he was police commissioner of the city of New York, because, as I recollect, at that time there was such an order. The chiefs of police in the cities of Chicago and Philadelphia and Louisville and every other city that is worthy to be called such adopt the same measures to secure fair elections. The purpose is to divest the election of any want of dignity that might be the result of too much familiarity. I say that no criticism of the police or Butler was possible. So, in order to place advantage in the place of invective and to build a wall against the helpless minority of this House in their demand for a fair consideration, a paragraph of the report is given over to ruthless abuse of the character of the residents of the 63 precincts that Mr. Butler carried.

What a significant fact it is that all the 63 precincts that are questioned as being fraudulent in this case are the precincts that were carried by the Democratic candidate for Congress, and not only by him, but by the remainder of the Democratic ticket.

One more example of the necessity for being audacious when claiming all the morality that is extant in the world. This majority, with a brazenness that I thought it was incapable of, states to the people of the country and the members of this House that the Democratic portion, the majority portion, of the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri is rotten to the core, and the 53 precincts, or thereabout, that Mr. Wagoner carried are pure and irreproachable from a moral stanpoint.

What evidence do they bring you? The chairman of the committee stood up here, knowing that it was impossible for anybody to read the record, and criticised three precincts, as to two of which the minority of the committee in presenting their views, agreed to reject the poll—agreed to throw it out. One was known as the "Snake" Kenney precinct. I am familiar with that, because it was mentioned in the first hundred pages or so, and the opportunity was presented to read the testimony in regard to it. In that precinct "Snake" Kenney, the great mogul, the boss of the precinct, was a candidate for constable. I do not know on what ticket. I know that he was a candidate for constable; that the interest of the Democratic or the Republican party were as naught in his eye. Every man in the House knows that when candidates for constable and their ambitions run afoul of the ambitions of honorable gentlemen in this House, there is one time and place where the minion of the law is no respecter of persons. "Snake" Kenney had to be elected. He came down to the polling place with his three or four men, and a fight was started. The polling books were taken away. That is the truth, so far as it is evidenced by the testimony of the man who, I believe, in parts of the record is characterized by many witnesses as unworthy of belief. But we of the minority took it as a fact, because the contestee, so far as we could learn in the record, had presented no testimony which reliably denied it.

We say that we do not want a dirty poll. Members of the minority, as soon as they read that testimony, agreed that it ought to go out of the record. Members of the majority will bear them out in that statement. The other precinct referred to was a precinct where one William Lee, who held the dignified and honorable position of an officer in the West End Colored Democratic Jefferson Club, was, according to the testimony, seen on registration day with something in his hand that looked like slips. The testimony is that he had around him a swarm of Senegambians, and the inevitable conclusion must have been that William Lee was out to "play horse" with the registration book. That is all the evidence, practically all; and the minority agreed to exclude that precinct from the polls.

Now, the other precinct referred to by the chairman of this committee was an important precinct—the precinct containing the Butler stables. It is necessary, in order to stir up sentiment in the House, to distribute pictures of the Butler stables.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FEELY. In a moment. You know, Mr. Speaker, if we did not have pictures of the Butler stables in the record as evidence, there are no people in Missouri, no witnesses, however prolific in their production of evidence, who could adequately describe the kind of a stable owned by the Excelsior Hauling Company, so we must have a picture distributed. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, that the House is not in order. Before the gentleman yields I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FEELY] to yield to me long enough to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] if he is going to move the previous question after this hour and his own is consumed? The purpose of asking that is that we must arrange some plan for the further argument and use of the hour.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I endeavored to the best of my ability to obtain an agreement with the gentleman on the other side as to the amount of time to be consumed by each side. My overtures in that direction have not been met with any other than that spirit which has prevailed all day in opposition to the consideration of this question. That time might just as well have been consumed in the deliberation and discussion of this case, but has been consumed in roll calls. I can now only say that the gentlemen will have to follow their own inclinations and judgment in the matter of consuming their time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then, I assume that that is a statement that the majority, under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, will sweep the gentleman who now has the floor from it, without a fair discussion of the case, and will yield no further consideration than the hour he has and which the gentleman from Illinois is now using.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman can assume what he pleases. I am unable to see how it will be possible for us to take the gentleman off the floor. There has been no attempt of that kind. He might have occupied the floor for two or three hours, instead of having that time consumed by roll calls.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am not giving that suggestion. I only want to see whether the gentleman is going to confine this debate, in the power which he has, to the two hours.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I will exercise the power which I have when the time comes in such a way as suits my judgment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is perfectly consistent with the gentleman's attitude, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman's time is limited, but I want to ask a question. How would the vote in the district stand if you excluded all of the votes that the Republican side of the Chamber claimed to have been fraudulently cast, giving them credit for the votes that were fraudulently cast and counting the honest vote in every precinct? What would the result be in such case?

Mr. FEELY. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, I can not do anything more than refer him to the gentleman from Pennsylvania who had presented to him the two theories, both of which he rejected and selected a third one of his own concoction.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question, but if an answer is desired from me and it will do any good it will afford me pleasure to do the best I can.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, I decline to have my time used by the other side.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is not my suggestion. It came from the other side. The gentleman referred to me.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania took the floor without permission.

Mr. MANN. And what is the gentleman from Missouri doing?

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, much has been said of the Butler stables registration. I desire to read some testimony from the record—testimony which is not contradicted, testimony which is not shaken by cross-examination. John R. McCarthy, the superintendent of the Excelsior Hauling Company, which concern owned and operated those stables, was put upon the stand, and in answer to certain questions gave the following testimony:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. McCarthy, to state what that stable is used for?
A. Well, the lower floor is used for nothing but stalls—stall room. The upper floor—why, one corner we use for a little feed. We get our feed in there just as we use it. The rest of it—why, the men sleep there.
Q. How many men are employed by the Excelsior Hauling and Transfer Company?
A. We employ all the way from two close up to four hundred men. That all depends on the season of the year.
Q. How many men do you employ in the summer time?
A. In the summer time it all depends on the crop of vegetables. If we have a plentiful crop, we have close to 400 men.

Mr. Speaker, this Excelsior Hauling Company is a large concern and has the contract for hauling all the garbage of the city of St. Louis.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit that if anyone will read this testimony which I now have not the time to read, it will amply bear out the statement that every man registered from the Butler stables would, in the reasonable logical nature of events, have been a resident of those stables.

I know that evening suits are not indigenous to residential stables. In those stables live the nomads of the world, the hobo, if you please; the tramp, if you please. But as long as he complies with the law of the State of Missouri as to residence in the State, after he has become a citizen of the United States, he has the right, if he complies with the law as to county, city, and precinct registration, to vote for a member of Congress, even if he lives in such a place as the Butler stables. I in my short life have known communities from which Republican majorities were extracted where they were not provided such palatial homes for the electors as the Butler stables. Pass the picture around, look at it, and determine for yourselves if it is not possible for 100 or 200 men to make their homes in that stable.

Now, I am going to pay just a little attention to a scheme relied upon by the majority as the quid pro quo for this contest. That scheme comprehended the mailing of some 25,179 registered letters to people whose names appeared on certain informative sheets that were spread broadcast among the voters of the district. Those 25,000 letters, as I say, were mailed, and 12,000 of them came back with a definite indorsement—so says the uncross-examined witness of the majority, so says the witness of the majority presented on the last day, when no opportunity was allowed to combat his testimony by rebuttal or rejoining testimony—12,000 of those letters came back with a definite indorsement to the effect that the members did not live there. That is his language. Of those 12,000, 3,000 odd voted in the election.

Now, this contestant asks the rejection of those votes because the names of 2,200, I believe, of them did not appear in the city directory—a city directory canvassed for a year previous—and because they were not reached by a registered letter which had on its face a demand upon the part of the sender, "If addressee is not at this address, return at once." In other words, with an eye single to declaring that the man did not reside in the house, the framers of this scheme said, "We will show the committee that he did not live there in December and January of 1901 and 1902, by the directory; we will show the committee that the voter did not live there in December, 1902, by the evidence of a registered letter." Now, the House and the country can form their own opinion as to the value of such evidence. I am not going to take the time properly to characterize it here. I suppose from the great stress that the majority have laid upon this they hope that somebody will take this up and discuss it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is charged by the contestant that there are some two or three thousand, I have forgotten the number now, of the names on the poll book, the book used as an official record of the number of men who vote, containing their names—it is charged that there are some 3,000 men who voted whose names are not upon these sheets. These sheets are entitled "List of registered voters, Fourth Ward, second precinct." These sheets are required by law to be distributed by the board of election commissioners of the city of St. Louis previous to the election. They are expected to contain the names of the men entitled to vote.

Now, they are not official in the sense that the law of the State of Missouri which provided for their printing ever intended that they should be used as evidence in a court or in an election contest. They are simply fugitive, informative sheets, gotten up for general advice as to the registration. Do not let anyone say fraud because there are names that are on the official register that are not on these sheets. They are not, Mr. Speaker, even copies of copies. I will state how they are prepared. They are prepared by the judges and clerks from verification lists, which are made by taking certain streets in the precinct and checking the names of voters in the order of the lowest to the highest numerical order of the street address.

It is easy to believe and easy to conceive how these judges and clerks, inexperienced men that they were, selected to perform a duty for a day, can make mistakes in writing up this register. Now, gentlemen, with the opportunity to produce these records, or if not to produce them to produce certified copies of the original registers, with the opportunity to produce examined copies or some evidence of the actual registration which would be accepted in any justice of the peace court in the country, and not these, the contestant allowed his fifteen days in chief and his five days in rebuttal, out of which he took such great advantage in getting into the record what was called the Owens scheme of legislating a man out of a seat in Congress by a registered letter and a city directory.

I know that the chairman, or whoever will close this debate, if they think it necessary to close it, will not be able to show that the contestee, if he did, was perfectly justified in rejecting this whole idea, and if he was not justified, he could never have seen the materiality of this list as testimony or evidence, without what was called this Owens scheme of tabulation of votes introduced the last day of the contest.

The chairman says, "How can we account for the fact that there were less ballots in the boxes than were counted in the recount before the notary public?" In every State, I take it, there is a provision in the election law providing that where ballots are destroyed, where ballots are defective, where the intention of the voter to register his opinion is aborted, these defective ballots shall be placed in envelopes provided for the purpose and returned to the election board. Not in this whole record is there one scintilla of evidence that the contestant attempted to open one of these envelopes containing defective ballots, which would have explained away the discrepancy in most of these cases.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I recognize, if I never recognized it before, the feeling of the strait-jacket. I have not had an opportunity to read this testimony in the manner in which testimony ought to be read when a member of this House is going to discharge his duty as a member of an elections committee and to give to a contest that judicial determination to which it is entitled in the light of the law and precedents. I have not had that opportunity. I make the statement boldly, and I doubt whether there is any member of this committee besides the chairman who will stand up and say to this House that he has had an opportunity to give this case that time and that judicial attention which he should have given it.

Mr. CURRIER. The gentleman says he had not time to read the testimony in this case. Does he think it necessary for the proper consideration of this case that the testimony of 400 witnesses called by Mr. Butler in regard to the nomination of Mr. Wagoner, which Mr. Butler's counsel said had nothing to do with this case, should be read, making hundreds and hundreds of pages of this record?

Mr. FEELY. Ah, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to yield to the gentleman to make a speech. I like the strait-jacket; it makes a man go ahead; it makes a man partisan.

Mr. Speaker, concluding, let me say that I believe that there never was a worse example of partisanship rampant than is here exhibited in the endeavor to railroad a man out of the seat to which he was honestly elected. Talk about a sufficiency of fraud which, Mr. Speaker, involved the poll in all these precincts. I hope the chairman will not say—what am I saying—he ought to, he must say it, that he can not separate the wheat from the chaff, although he has in the committee room the record of every vote cast in these 63 precincts, with a tabulation as to how they voted and whom they voted for and whether the ballot is believed to be regular or not by the contestant.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FEELY. I yield, if it is a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would ask if he recollects the fact that in every one of these boxes in the 41 precincts votes were missing, running from 5 in the lowest up to 140?

Mr. FEELY. I have answered that. They never opened the defective-ballot envelopes.

In concluding, allow me to say if this majority of the committee desires to bring in a report of this sort, without argument and without brief on the law, without an opportunity to consider the testimony, just the same as I conceive it to be my duty in trying a case, whereas in this case the counsel was asked that material testimony be pointed out to members of the committee, which was not done, why of course they can do so.

Mr. Speaker, let this majority go ahead, let a partisan judgment be entered here to-day, and leave it for the country to judge whether a man, no matter whether he may come from what is called by some, even if they emanate from Pennsylvania, a corrupted locality, should be unseated in this manner; let it be seen whether the country will say that a man has not a right to a seat in this Congress because he was voted for by people whose morals are not up to the standard of those who would try a case without reading the evidence and enter judgment without argument on the law. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] the balance of my time. I would ask how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for anybody in the short space of nine minutes to make any particular impression in the discussion of a case, the testimony in which covers over twenty-three hundred pages, and the briefs in which are large and the reports in which are voluminous.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri be permitted to occupy the floor for one hour.

Mr. OLMSTED. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I renew my request, and make it thirty minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I object; the time which might have been consumed in argument has been wasted otherwise.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I hope at least, Mr. Speaker, that this interruption will not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The contestee was returned by nearly sixty-three hundred majority. In order to seat the contestant, the committee recommends the throwing out of precincts which gave him over 9,000 votes and gave the contestant something like 2,000 votes. The reason given, so far as there is any reason given for this action, is that it is not possible to ascertain what, in these 41 precincts was the honest and what the dishonest vote. If that be true, it is strange that the committee has not recommended, being unable to ascertain how many honest votes were cast for one candidate or the other, it is strange that the committee has not recommended that there be declared no election. Instead of that, inasmuch as the majority of Butler in these precincts is greater than sixty-three hundred majority returned for him, it is found convenient to throw them all out and figure up 700 majority for Wagoner.

I submit, upon the theory of their own contention, that nothing can be done honestly in a case where you can not determine what are the honest votes beyond declaring that there is no election; but what reason is there for concluding that you can not determine the honest votes in this case? There is no offer to show that fraudulent votes were cast or that dishonest voters were denied an opportunity to vote. Discrepancies are found in these various precincts in the number of votes alleged to have been cast and the number of votes returned for this candidate or that candidate, sometimes considerable discrepancies, sometimes very small discrepancies, and in some instances a few votes. Then, instead of assuming or indulging in the humane supposition that errors may have occurred through the lack of skill or inadvertence, or lack of care of the clerks in any one of the thousand ways that might have occurred, and frequently do occur honestly, the whole precinct is disfranchised. Hundreds of men, of whose honesty there is no question, are disfranchised, and the seat is given to a man who comes here over 6,000 votes short of his competitor.

This is a very simple proceeding, if gentlemen have any regard for the honesty and decency in the matter. Of course if the only object is to take the seat and throw the incumbent out because it is supposed there are votes enough to throw him out, the proceeding is very well understood. But why should the committee, if that be the case, go through the travesty of an argument, or talk about legal principles, or talk about the sacredness of the ballot, about the committee trying to ascertain who is elected, when every man who knows a very little about the case must know to a certainty that Wagoner is not elected? Wagoner came on the Republican ballot, and I defy any gentleman to contradict it, when he had no right upon it at all. He had no right anywhere in that election except upon a ticket by himself, with not another candidate on the ballot; but he is put on the Republican ballot.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; of course I can not yield unless the gentleman gives me time. The impertinence, and assumption, and assurance, and gall, the want of a sense of justice in a man trying to run roughshod over gentlemen on this side and yet by frivolous and childish questions taking the time of a man who has only nine minutes [laughter and applause on the Democratic side] is utterly beyond the comprehension of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course. [Laughter.] Many things much plainer are much beyond his intellect.

Now, here is a man who was not nominated, here is a man whose party did not put him forward, here is a man who had no place rightfully upon his party's ticket, and yet in a spirit of fairness and justice, in generosity that comes from being decorous, he is put upon the Republican ballot, where he gets the benefit of the votes of the Republican party which cast him out and repudiated him when they came to the matter of nomination.

And now we have here the farce, the shameful spectacle, of an attempt to put that man into the House, to draw $10,000 salary, to draw two mileages, to draw two allowances for stationery. In all the proceedings—not only in the United States Congress but the wide world over—in the history of election contests no other case so base, so low, so mean, showing such utter wont of decency and all pretense of right, so thoroughly colorless of anything except iniquity and wrong, can be found; nothing in baseness and hypocrisy, nothing in meanness and deceit, nothing in bitter partisanship and cant, to match or to be compared to this case. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Take the seat, if you choose to take it; steal it, if you choose to steal it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Rob the man who was elected, if you choose to rob him. Throw upon the people of that district, who twice have returned Mr. Butler to Congress, the representation of a man whom they have repudiated. Bring this man in here; associate with him upon terms of equality for the remaining days of this session. Welcome him to your bosoms as a man not at all entitled to the seat, but a man fully entitled to political fellowship with those who would steal it for him—the recipient of stolen goods placed upon a precise par with those who stole the goods. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman on the other side suggests that time has been frittered away. Ay, the time has been well employed which has been used to delay the hour of the perpetration, the completion, of this iniquity. And let gentlemen understand that until the 4th day of March—until the Speaker from the chair declares this House adjourned sine die, there will be done on this side whatever can be done decently, under the rules of the House, in accordance with appropriate legislative procedure, to carry to the country the fact, to stamp upon the record, to show to future generations that we are not going to tolerate or condone this kind of larceny.

Take the seat and pay for it! Take the seat and be accountable for the wrong that gives it to you! Gather all that you can by what you get out of Wagoner; gather all that you can by what you get out of this act; but pay the penalty—answer the responsibility. If legislation fails—if time which you think ought not to be consumed is consumed in roll calls—recollect when you vote to steal Mr. Butler's seat that you are voting to kill the measures that will be killed in consequence of that act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is not a man upon the committee who has read all the evidence in this case. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has read "all that was material." All that was material! All that he deemed essential to take the seat from Butler and give it to Wagoner! Everything outside of that is "immaterial." [Applause on the Democratic side.] But whatever evidence may show that Butler is entitled to the seat, whatever evidence might convince anyone who is willing to be convinced that Wagoner is not entitled to it, that would be "immaterial"—immaterial to the purposes of the inquiry. I presume that not even a second gentleman on the committee, barring, of course, the most industrious and astute chairman, has read even a part of what on that side is deemed "material." He has been told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I presume, what his conclusion upon the "material" part is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

[Mr. DE ARMOND, as he resumed his seat, was loudly applauded on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14764. An act to establish United States courts at Wilkesboro, N. C.

On February 24, 1903:

H. R. 5070. An act for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors;

H. R. 16021. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2557. An act for the relief of Henry L. McCalla;

H. R. 9063. An act to refund certain taxes paid by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, of St. Louis, Mo.;

H. R. 13257. An act to refund penalty to the Bank of Colfax, Iowa;

H. R. 1605. An act granting a pension to John S. Whitlege;

H. R. 15659. An act granting a pension to Elise Sigel;

H. R. 17247. An act granting a pension to Mary H. Rumple; and

H. R. 12508. An act granting an increase of pension to James Jones.

CONTESTED ELECTION—WAGONER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (when order had been restored) recognized Mr. OLMSTED.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I first rose and addressed the Chair as ranking member of the Elections Committee No. 2. I was not recognized. Am I not in order for recognition?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is simply following out the ordinary practice in reference to recognition. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] having just concluded his remarks on one side, the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] on the other.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. When shall I be entitled to recognition under the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will answer that question whenever it arises. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. OLMSTED. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, in the brief period allotted to me for the presentation of this case to the House I have not time to pay any attention to the vituperation and abuse of the gentleman who has just taken his seat. Neither his abuse nor his threats will prevent any member on this side of the Chamber from performing his whole duty. And I want to say, further, before the gentleman leaves the Hall, that the difficulty with the gentleman from Missouri is that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, my friend, you ought to sympathize with me, because that is precisely your own position. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER. I do deeply sympathize with him, and I think in a moment I can convince even the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] that he does not know what he is talking about. He says that in this case Mr. Wagoner was never nominated. The records in this case show that Wagoner's nomination was certified by the election commissioners of the city of St. Louis, two of whom were Democrats and one a Republican, and his name went upon the official ballot as Mr. Butler's name went upon the official ballot, and no gentleman on that side of the Chamber denies that statement, or my reference to that fact.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MILLER. No; I will not yield to the gentleman from Missouri. A gentleman who makes such statements upon the floor of this House will not take any of my time when I have but ten minutes in which to present this matter. I want to say further——

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given half an hour. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. I object.

Mr. MILLER. Now, these are the facts in reference to the nomination. The gentleman says he was not nominated by a convention. I call his attention to the fact that he was nominated by petition, and that nomination in that way by petition was approved by the Republican convention, and that convention indorsed him by its official action.

Mr. FEELY. Were those signatures forged?

Mr. MILLER. Now, the gentleman is pleading the baby act when he says that.

Mr. FEELY. The evidence shows they were.

Mr. MILLER. The able gentleman from Missouri, Judge Bond, who presented this case in behalf of the contestee conceded the nomination of contestant and admitted that contestee had waived that question, and urged this as evidence of the magnanimity of Mr. Butler.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is stating—I doubt if it occurred [laughter on the Democratic side]—but he is stating what occurred in the committee.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the record in this case, which has been published and is the same which I have used here in my reference to the language of Judge Bond in his argument before this committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That I deny. I deny the statement in the record.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], who generally is fair, to turn now to the argument of Judge Bond. I do not want to take up my time in doing so. He will find in that record that Judge Bond argued this case, and presents it here to this House now, and it was said, in order to show the great magnanimity of Mr. Butler, they never raised any question, but conceded that this nomination was certified properly by the officers of the city of St. Louis.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman is incorrect in his former statement.

Mr. MILLER. And I say that because of that certificate his name went on the official ballot.

Mr. FEELY. That is right.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that is right, that is the exact record.

Mr. FEELY. But not by nomination.

Mr. MILLER. And I want to further say to the gentleman from Missouri, when he talks about anybody stealing a seat in this House, if he desires to turn to the record in this case, and he can turn to it, and I will give him the pages of the record——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But you will not give me the time.

Mr. MILLER. There he will find the sworn testimony of the Republican judges showing the conduct of the policemen of the city of St. Louis in one precinct. He will find it on page 14 of the record in the testimony of James H. Smith. One policeman went in there when a Republican judge had refused to allow men to repeat——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What was his surname?

Mr. MILLER. James H. Smith was his name, and you will find it on page 14 of the record. You might go out now to the cloakroom. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I say that the testimony of Mr. Smith is that the policeman went into the polling place, and he found the Republican judge was objecting to men who were repeating there, forming a circle, walking around in the room, not even changing coats or hats for the purpose of trying to conceal their identity, and when a Republican judge objected to their voting——

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I insist on being recognized to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FEELY. My point of order is that the gentleman is now making statements which are not material. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. FEELY. Mr. Speaker, the minority concedes that the precinct to which the gentleman refers should be thrown out of the ballot.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I was simply referring to this little episode on election day for the purpose of vindicating the action of the minority of the committee in reporting in favor of throwing out the entire vote of two precincts in the Twelfth Congressional district. But I propose to give the record. The policeman walked in, after this Republican judge had objected to these repeaters time and again——

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. I will not yield. This policeman said "I understand that you judges are armed here, and I will have to search you." And so he searched the Republican judges and clerks, and then he walked to the door and said to the mob outside, "Why, it is a mistake. They have no arms of any kind upon their persons." And immediately the mob rushed in and they knocked the Republican judge senseless, and he had to be carried out and have his head bound up, and was taken home by the policeman, who refused to arrest any of the men who had committed the assault upon the Republican judge.

Just across the street from one voting place there was a photograph gallery, and a photographer attempted to take a snapshot of what was going on across the way, where men were forming in circles and were repeating, voting from six to eight or ten times, and suddenly the mob rushed over there, broke in the windows and doors, destroyed the materials of the photographer, and knocked him down unconscious, and beat him almost to death, and the policeman who was on duty at that precinct went across the street and arrested the photographer as soon as he became conscious, but did not arrest any man there who had committed the assault upon this photographer or destroyed his property.

I call your attention to the fact that in the 41 precincts that the majority of the committee have thrown out there were from one to three policemen at these voting precincts during the day, and there was but one arrest made during the entire day in those precincts, although the judges and clerks time and again called the attention of the policemen to the fact that they were repeating there from one to ten times. I call your attention to the fact that so far as this illegal registration is concerned, that it was largely made up, in these 41 precincts, from houses of prostitution, from saloons, and from gambling hells. And witnesses are called in this case who testify that the people registered from those places were not there upon election day. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. THAYER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THAYER. Was not a motion made that the gentleman's time be extended half an hour, and was there anyone objecting to that? I should like to have the gentleman's time extended. I have some questions I should like to ask him myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman who made the request was not entitled to the floor to make the request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. So that I will not lose my rights, I ask for recognition by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman who made the request that the time of the gentleman from Kansas be extended did not have the right to the floor to make the request.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] is recognized.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be notified when I have occupied four minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be so notified.

Mr. OLMSTED. In reply——

Mr. THAYER. In the four minutes I should like to ask the gentleman a question or two.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not yield, and I do not want this taken out of my time.

Mr. THAYER. Is this a vaudeville show or a legislative body?

Mr. OLMSTED. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to reply to the exceedingly able argument, the legal argument of the gentleman from Missouri, who speaks best when he knows nothing about either the law or the facts of the case. I call his attention to an extract from McCrary on Elections:

> It has long been held by all judicial tribunals of the country, as well as by the decisions of Congress, and the legislatures of the several States, that the entire poll should always be rejected for any one of the three following reasons: First, want of authority in the election board. Second, fraud in conducting election. Third, such irregularities and misconduct as render the election void.

These last two reasons are found in every one of these 41 election precincts which we have rejected. In every one of them there were missing from the ballot boxes numbers ranging from 5 to 140 ballots of persons shown on the poll books to have appeared and voted. Is not that fraud and irregularity in conducting the election? In every one of these cases there were duplicate ballots in the same name, the same number, and the same address counted for Butler. Is that fraud or irregularity, or is it not? In every one of them the ballot boxes were found to contain ballots illegally cast by persons who were not registered. In every one of them ballots cast by repeaters. In every one of them the election officers had entered into a conspiracy to defeat the contestant.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri inaugurated this system of bulldozing, served notice upon us that if we even filed a report in this case at this session there should be no further legislation, and has to-day, with others on that side of the Chamber, consumed three hours on frivolous motions intended merely for delay, which time might have been devoted to the discussion of this case. It showed that they did not dare to discuss it on the law and the facts. They wanted to prevent a discussion.

Now, I submit that this House will disgrace itself if it does not seat a man who is shown clearly to be entitled to this seat and shall continue longer a man who has been allowed to draw $10,000 of salary to which he is not entitled and $4,000 for election expenses. I appeal to this House to resent the gentleman's threat; to maintain its own dignity; to preserve the integrity of its own membership, and to seat the sitting member—[great laughter and applause on the Democratic side]—to unseat the sitting member and seat the gentleman who will be the sitting member upon the conclusion of this case, because he is fairly and justly entitled to the seat. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I now demand the previous question on the resolutions and amendment by way of substitute to the final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore proceeded to put the question.

Mr. OLMSTED. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 112, answered "present" 12, not voting 76; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

For the balance of the day:
Mr. ROBERTS with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. CONNER with Mr. CREAMER.
Mr. FOSS with Mr. BELLAMY.
Mr. DRISCOLL with Mr. DAVIS of Florida.
Mr. GILL with Mr. FLEMING.
Mr. HITT with Mr. MCDERMOTT.
Mr. MCCLEARY with Mr. NORTON.
Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. JONES of Virginia.
Mr. PARKER with Mr. PUGSLEY.
Mr. SULLOWAY with Mr. TRIMBLE.
On this vote:
Mr. EDDY with Mr. COOPER of Texas.
Mr. WACHTER with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I now move to recommit the case to the Committee on Elections, and I desire to say that the reason of moving that this case go back to the Committee on Elections is——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order now. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let the amendment be rereported, so that we may know what it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:
"That George C. Wagoner was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri and is not entitled to a seat therein.
"Resolved, That James J. Butler was elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri and is entitled to a seat therein."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that my motion was in order. This is a substitute for the original resolution, and is not an amendment differing in its terms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has no standing in a parliamentary way except as an amendment. It is offered by the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition at the proper time to make that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this resolution contains two propositions. Each subject will stand by itself, and I demand a separate vote.

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that a substitute amendment is not divisible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that under the rules of the House, as the gentleman from Tennessee is aware, a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that, but if it contains two substantive propositions, I suppose the Chair would entertain a division of the question. We have always had a division on questions of this kind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no doubt about that. The gentleman will be entitled to a division on the main proposition, but on the motion to strike out a resolution and insert it is not divisible.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Chair holds that this is a motion to strike out and insert?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not divisible, and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee will recognize the propriety of that ruling. The motion is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. PAYNE. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 153, answered "present" 11, not voting 75; as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:
For the balance of the day:
Mr. BOUTELL with Mr. GRIGGS.
Mr. WACHTER with Mr. WILSON.
Mr. GRAFF with Mr. COONEY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to recommit the resolutions to the Committee on Elections. My purpose in making that motion is this——

Mr. PAYNE. I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had the floor, and I ask the Chair whether he proposes to recognize——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to recommit the resolutions to the Committee on Elections. On that motion the gentlemen from New York [Mr. PAYNE] asks for the previous question.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 156, noes 4.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is dilatory. A quorum has just voted; and the presumption is that there is a quroum in or about the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The record discloses the absence of a quorum. Evidently there is no quorum in the Hall. The Chair orders the doors to be closed. The Doorkeeper will take measures to enforce the attendance of absent members. The yeas and nays will now be taken under the rule, and gentlemen, as their names are called will respond "aye" or "no" or "present."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 12, answered "present" 19, not voting 174; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recorded as answering "present."

Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania. I desire to be recorded "aye."

The name of Mr. BURK of Pennsylvania being again called, he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HANBURY. Mr. Speaker, I answered "present" on the roll call. I desire to be recorded in the affirmative.

Mr. HANBURY's name being again called, he voted "aye."

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to change my vote from "present" to "no."

The name of Mr. MCRAE was again called; and he voted in the negative.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. WANGER with Mr. ADAMSON.

For the balance of the day:

Mr. BLAKENEY with Mr. MICKEY.

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Mr. SPERRY with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. BROWN with Mr. COWHERD.

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN.

Mr. SHATTUC with Mr. NEVILLE.

Mr. JENKINS with Mr. PADGETT.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. ALLEN of Kentucky.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. COCHRAN.

Mr. HEATWOLE with Mr. TATE.

The result of the vote was announced, as above stated.

During the call of the House and pending the announcement of the vote by the Speaker the following occurred:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. I make the point of order that members are not allowed to stand around the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen will please take their seats.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask if the vote has been added, if the clerks have finished their count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will respond to the gentleman at the proper time.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know whether the gentlemen on the other side who are in their seats and who failed to respond to their names have been counted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessse. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, the gentleman has a right make that inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rules of the House are being enforced.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I again make the point of order that gentlemen have no right to stand around the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To what gentlemen does the gentleman from Tennessee refer?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, was there when I made the point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the gentleman's point of order took him away.

Mr. PAYNE. I noticed just a moment before that that the gentleman from Tennessee was there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was sent for by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will please note as present Mr. BANKHEAD of Alabama, who was present and failed to respond when his name was called.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recommit.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Chair announced so many as present. I would like to ask, as a fact, whether these gentlemen answered present or whether they were noted as present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of them answered "present," excepting Mr. BANKHEAD. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WANGER), there were—ayes 5, noes 165.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair overrules the point of order as being dilatory. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And I venture to say that no occupant of the chair ever before did that. It is arbitrary, tyrannical, unconstitutional; it is unjust and it is unfair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I denounce it as unfair and unjust and as never having been done before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James J. Butler was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

The question was taken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ayes have it, and the question now is on the second resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is tyrannical.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not out of order. The Chair is arbitrary and unjust.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the second resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That George C. R. Wagoner was elected a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Congressional district of Missouri, and is entitled to a seat therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appear to have it, the ayes have it, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to reconsider, and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the Chair intend to deprive a member of this House of his seat without the right of a division?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As many as are in favor of the resolution will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask what question the Chair is submitting?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman had listened, he would have heard the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was listening. I deny that I was not listening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the second resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, what is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On agreeing to the second resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A division is demanded. As many as are in favor of the resolution will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why do you grant a division now, and not on the other motion?

The House divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the ayes are 161 and the noes are 2.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The resolution is agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I say that never was done before. I did not believe any occupant of the chair could be found in this House who would do it. It is unnecessary. You have a majority.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What became of your members?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is unjust and tyrannical, and I did not believe that any occupant of the chair would ever do it. I say that no other gentleman would have done it. The Speaker would not have done it.

At this point the Speaker resumed the chair.

The SPEAKER. All gentlemen will be seated.

Mr. JOY and Mr. Wagoner took their places in front of the Speaker's desk.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce Judge C. R. Wagoner.

The SPEAKER administered the oath of office to Mr. Wagoner.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15520. An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands; and

H. R. 16567. An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand the reading of those bills, Mr. Speaker. We want to know what bills those are.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read them by their titles.

The Clerk read the titles of the bills.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There is another matter to be presented to the House.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4178. An act for the relief of Austin A. Yates;

H. R. 17204. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Moors Rock, in the State of Arkansas;

H. R. 3510. An act for the relief of the executors of James P. Willett, deceased, late postmaster of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 14051. An act granting the consent of Congress to N. F. Thompson and associates to erect a dam and construct power station at Muscle Shoals, Alabama;

H. R. 16909. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Tenn.," approved March 2, 1901;

H. R. 15595. An act confirming and ceding jurisdiction to the State of Arkansas over certain lands formerly in Fort Smith Reservation in said State, and asserting and retaining Federal jurisdiction over certain other lands in said reservation;

H. R. 1027. An act granting a pension to Lavina Cook;

H. R. 16522. An act granting an increase of pension to Caleb C. Van Sickell;

H. R. 16509. An act to authorize the Pearl and Leaf Rivers Railroad Company to bridge Pearl River in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 16. An act to provide for the erection at Washington, D. C., of statues to the memory of Brigadier-General Count Pulaski and Major-General Baron von Steuben of the Continental Army; and

H. R. 17088. An act to create a new division of the eastern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Texarkana, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the Agricultural appropriation bill, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The rules require——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Agricultural appropriation bill, to disagree to all the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I insist on the regular order under the rules of this Republican House. I demand the regular order.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow, and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and on that motion he demands the previous question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, pending that, allow me to report a bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask the gentleman from Indiana not to do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a division.

The House divided; and the Speaker announced—ayes 169, noes 5.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order, for the reason that the recent call of the House shows that there was a quorum present, and it is well settled by the rules that the point of no quorum can not be made when a recent call of the House shows the presence of a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not hear the gentleman, the Chair very much regrets to say. The Chair has recently examined the matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that that was when no intervening business had taken place, and intervening business has taken place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was half an hour ago, and members, to my knowledge, have left the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would suggest that there are four present on the Democratic side who did not rise.

The SPEAKER. The question is decided, and the Chair is clear that it is decided correctly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal, as dilatory. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from New York to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for a division on that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER proceeded to count.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I do not wish to call attention to any gentleman, but I see gentlemen in the House not members of the House. I presume they are doing so innocently, but they are standing in the line of the Speaker's gavel.

The SPEAKER. Members-elect who are not members of this House will be seated. The Chair, however, has been guarded in that particular.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not know whether the Chair would know all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not know all. The gentleman is right.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 173, noes 4.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of G. B. Harper, administrator of estate of Carolinas Boyd, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Tabitha, Daniel Gould, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig Pomona, Reuben Coffin, master, against The United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JONES of Washington, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 17393) to authorize registers and receivers of United States land offices to furnish transcripts of their records to individuals, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3864); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. FOSS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 459) requesting information of the Secretary of the Navy concerning plans and specifications for the building of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 3865); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. LACEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 6779) to quiet certain land titles in the State of Mississippi, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3866); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAYTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 421) requesting information from the Secretary of the Navy with reference to a permanent programme for the steady increase, equipment, and manning of the Navy of the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 3867); which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TAWNEY: A bill (H. R. 17513) to amend section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to invalid pensions—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 17514) to promote and encourage an American merchant marine—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 17515) to create the Territory of Alaska and to provide for the government of the same—to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17516) authorizing the North American Telegraph and Cable Company to construct a submarine cable—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BOREING: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 279) providing for the printing of the report of the Anthracite Coal Strike Commission—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 280) directing the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report of the best system of wireless telegraphy and estimate of cost of purchase of same or rights for the use thereof—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JENKINS: A concurrent resolution (H. C. Res. 94) to print 12,000 copies of the records, briefs, arguments of counsel, and all opinions in the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of Francis v. United States and Champion v. Ames—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. DALZELL: A resolution (H. Res. 468) relating to consideration of appropriation bills—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. LOUDENSLAGER: A resolution (H. Res. 469) for printing for Committee on Pensions—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. DALZELL: A resolution (H. Res. 470) changing the rules relative to motion to take a recess—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts: A resolution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring pensions for life savers—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By the SPEAKER: A memorial of the legislature of Arizona, against annexing any part of said Territory to Utah—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. CORLISS: A resolution of the legislature of Michigan, in favor of the erection of a monument to the memory of Charles V. Gridley—to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRUNDIDGE: A bill (H. R. 17517) granting an increase of pension to Solomon W. Gore—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAHON: A bill (H. R. 17518) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Bartley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILSON: A bill (H. R. 17519) granting an increase of pension to James Howard Stevens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOREING: Petition of W. S. Smith and other citizens of Monroe County, Ky., in favor of a bill to create a bureau of public roads—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: Resolutions of the convention of Western Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Association, in Kansas City, Mo., favoring the extension of reciprocity—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Parsons Division No. 161, Order of Railway Conductors, favoring Senate bill 3560, known as the Foraker safety-appliance bill—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Winfield, Kans., in favor of an amendment to the Constitution defining legal marriage to be monogamic, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWN: Petition of Sherry Christian Endeavor Society, of Sherry, Wis., for the passage of a bill to forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

By Mr. BURKETT: Resolutions of the Omaha (Nebr.) Central Labor Union, favoring the repeal of the desert-land law—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CURTIS: Resolution of the Kansas State Temperance Union, asking for temperance legislation—to the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Also, petition of C. S. Albright and other lessees of the Indian Pasture Reserve No. 3, Okla., asking that occupants be given the preference right to lands when open for settlement—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1903.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SPOONER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved.

STATE CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the claims of the States of New Hampshire, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Rhode Island aggregating $1,290,611.77, allowed by the Auditor for the War Department, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMERS W. L. EWING AND LOUISVILLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 31st ultimo, a report by the Auditor for the War Department as to claims made by certain marine insurance companies of Cincinnati and St. Louis; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, a list of judgments rendered in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIST OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims not heretofore reported to Congress amounting to $265,071.86; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee of Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. GRIFFITH as a conferee at the conference on the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska," Mr. KLEBERG having resigned.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands; and

A bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint memorial of the legislature of Arizona relative to the enactment of legislation to protect the holders of all bonds issued under the authority of the acts of the legislative assembly of that Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Territory of Arizona. Office of the Secretary. United States of America, Territory of Arizona, ss.

I, Isaac T. Stoddard, secretary of the Territory of Arizona, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true and complete transcript of council joint memorial No. 1, adopted by the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona February 20, 1903, which was filed in this office the 20th day of February, A. D. 1903, at 11.50 o'clock a. m., as provided by law.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] ISAAC T. STODDARD,
Secretary of the Territory of Arizona.

Council joint memorial No. 1.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives of the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to submit to your honorable bodies that—

Whereas the loan commission of the Territory of Arizona, in session in the city of Phoenix on the 10th day of February, 1903, ordered funded and are now preparing to forthwith fund in fifty-year 3 per cent bonds of the Territory of Arizona the 150 bonds of $1,000 each of the county of Pima, issued in 1883 to the Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad under the provisions of the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona approved February 1, 1883, together with the accrued and unpaid interest thereon, which said bonds and the unpaid interest coupons thereof now amount to the sum of $317,685; and

Whereas such action on the part of the loan commission of Arizona was in response to a mandate of the supreme court of the Territory of Arizona, issued under the direction of the Supreme Court of the United States, commanding said loan commission to so fund said bonds and interest; and

Whereas said bonds were issued in 1883 to aid in the construction and operation of a railroad between the city of Tucson and the town of Globe, in the Territory of Arizona; and,

Whereas said railroad was never constructed and was never intended to be constructed and operated, and the people of the said county of Pima have never received any benefit or advantage whatever for said bonds, and the issue and delivery of said bonds was procured by fraudulent and collusive machinations, on account of which said Pima County has never recognized or acknowledged said bonds as valid, but has at all times refused all demands for interest thereon; and

Whereas said bonds were by the Supreme Court of the United States, at its October, 1894, term, in the case of Lewis v. Pima County (155 U. S., 54), adjudged and declared wholly invalid and void; and

Whereas after said bonds were so declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, by its act approved June 6, 1896 (Statutes at Large, vol. 29, p. 262), pursuant to a memorial of the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled (a copy of which memorial is hereto attached), validated certain bonds of the Territory of Arizona and various counties and municipalities thereof; and

Whereas according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Utter et al. v. Franklin et al., decided January 3, 1899

(172 U. S., 416), said act of Congress validated and made legal the aforesaid bonds of Pima County, which had previously been declared by the Supreme Court of the United States invalid and void; and

Whereas said memorial of the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, so addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, was not intended to include said Pima County bonds, and the language thereof was misconstrued by the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, as by a comparison of said act of the Forty-fourth Congress approved June 6, 1896, and said memorial will clearly appear, for the reason that said memorial appealed to the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States to legalize and validate bonds which had been sold in good faith, the validity of which had been acknowledged; and

Whereas said act of the Forty-fourth Congress legalized and validated all bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness of the said Territory of Arizona, and the counties and municipalities thereof, which had been authorized by legislative enactments, whether lawful or not, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the aforementioned case of Utter et al. v. Franklin et al.; and

Whereas the said Forty-fourth Congress of the United States has so validated the aforesaid notorious bonds, without request or solicitation on the part of the people of said Pima County, and has thereby imposed upon the people of said Pima County and Santa Cruz County (the latter county having been set off from Pima County in 1899 by act of the twentieth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona), through the aforesaid action of said loan commission, an unjust and most grievous burden, for which said people of said counties have never received any benefit or advantage whatever; and

Whereas the aforesaid action of the said loan commission, pursuant to the aforesaid mandate, precludes the said counties of Pima and Santa Cruz from making further legal defense against the imposition of this unjust burden, and the obligation of the said counties by the action of said loan commission in funding said bonds, pursuant to their order, will be rendered fixed and certain, without recourse or hope of relief:

Wherefore, on behalf of the people of said Pima and Santa Cruz counties and the Territory of Arizona, we most respectfully request and urge your honorable bodies to grant relief from the burden of the aforesaid bond issue by an appropriation of sufficient funds from the Treasury of the United States to cover the sum total of the aforesaid bonds and accrued interest, so as aforesaid legalized and validated by the Forty-fourth Congress of the United States, to the end that the same may be forthwith paid, discharged, and canceled, and not funded by the said loan commission of the Territory of Arizona: Provided, however, That should said bonds have been refunded by the loan commission of Arizona before the passage of the act of relief, then and in that event the said county of Pima, Territory of Arizona, shall be reimbursed in the full sum of $317,685 by direct appropriation.

The Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Arizona is hereby requested and urged to use all proper means within his power to bring this subject before the Congress of the United States now in session by the introduction at once of a bill providing for the relief herein prayed for.

The secretary of the Territory of Arizona is hereby directed to transmit forthwith a certified copy of this memorial to the Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Arizona; also one to the President of the Senate of the United States and also one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

Passed and adopted by the council of the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, the 20th day of February, 1903.

EUGENE S. IVES,
President of the Council.

Passed and adopted by the house of representatives of the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, the 20th day of February, 1903.

THEODORE T. POWERS,
Speaker of the House.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to submit to your honorable bodies: That—

Whereas under various acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona certain of the counties of the Territory were authorized to issue in aid of railroads and other quasi public improvements and did under such acts issue bonds, which said bonds were sold in open market, in most instances at their face value, and are now held at home and abroad by persons who, in good faith, invested their money in the same, and, save and except such knowledge as the law imputes to the holder of bonds issued under authorized acts, are holders of the same; and

Whereas the validity of these bonds for many years after their issuance was unquestioned and acknowledged by the payment of the interest thereon as it fell due; and

Whereas there has recently been raised a question as to whether these acts of the legislative assembly were valid under the organic law of the Territory, which had led to a movement looking to the repudiation of the indebtedness created under and by virtue of such acts; and

Whereas we believe that such repudiation would, under the circumstances, work great wrong and hardship to the holders of such bonds, and at the same time seriously affect the credit and standing of our people for honesty and fair dealing and bring us into disrepute:

Wherefore we most strongly urge upon your most honorable bodies the propriety and justice of passing such curative and remedial legislation as will protect the holders of all bonds issued under the authority of acts of the legislative assembly, the validity of which has heretofore been acknowledged, and that you further legislate as to protect all innocent parties having entered into contracts resulting from inducements offered by our Territorial legislation, and relieve the people of the Territory from the disastrous effects that must necessarily follow any repudiation of good faith on the part of the Territory, and that you may so further legislate as to validate all acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory which have held out inducements for the investment of capital within the Territory, and which have led to the investment of large sums of money in enterprises directly contributing to the development and growth of the Territory, and thus relieve the honest people of the Territory from the disastrous effects that must necessarily follow any violation of good faith on the part of our people.

Resolved, That our Delegate to Congress be, and he is hereby, instructed to use all honorable means to bring this subject to the earnest consideration of Congress; that the secretary of the Territory be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing to each House of Congress and to our Delegate in Congress.

Indorsed: Council joint memorial No. 1. By Mr. Corbett. In council. Adopted unanimously February 20, 1903. J. C. Evans, chief clerk. February 20, 1903, house adopted memorial by unanimous vote. C. W. Miller, chief clerk. February 20, 1903, sent to council. Filed in the office of the secretary of the Territory of Arizona this 20th day of February, A. D. 1903, at 11.50 a. m. Isaac T. Stoddard, secretary of Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint memorial of the legislature of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation to exclude from the provisions of the act of Congress of June 6, 1896, the bonds issued by Pima County to the Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad Company, etc.; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Territory of Arizona, office of the secretary. United States of America, Territory of Arizona, ss:

MEMORIAL OF PIMA AND SANTA CRUZ COUNTIES.

To the council and house of representatives of the twenty-second legislative assembly of Arizona:

Your memorialists, the boards of supervisors of Pima and Santa Cruz counties, respectively, in joint session assembled, beg leave to submit to your honorable bodies that the loan commission of the Territory of Arizona, in session in the city of Phoenix on the 10th day of February, 1903, ordered funded and are now prepared to forthwith fund in fifty-year 3 per cent bonds all of the 150 notorious bonds (for years known as the Pima County Narrow-Gauge Railroad bonds), together with the accrued and unpaid interest thereon, amounting in all to about $320,000; that such action on the part of the loan commission of Arizona was in response to a mandate of the supreme court of the Territory of Arizona, issued under authority of the Supreme Court of the United States, commanding said loan commission to so fund said bonds and interest. That said bonds were issued by the county of Pima in 1883 to aid in the construction and operation of a railroad between the city of Tucson and the town of Globe, in the Territory of Arizona; that said railroad was never constructed or operated and was never intended to be constructed or operated, and the issue and delivery of said bonds was procured by fraudulent and collusive machinations. That said Pima County has never recognized or acknowledged said bonds as valid, and has at all times refused all demands for interest thereon.

That said bonds were by the Supreme Court of the United States, at its October, 1894, term, in the case of Lewis v. Pima County, adjudged and declared wholly invalid and void. That after said bonds were so declared invalid the Congress of the United States, by its act approved June 6, 1896 (a copy of which is hereto attached), pursuant to a memorial of the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled (a copy of which memorial is hereto attached), validated certain bonds of the Territory of Arizona and various counties and municipalities thereof, including the aforesaid notorious Pima County narrow-gauge railroad bonds, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Utter et al. v. Franklin et al., decided in January, 1899. That said memorial, addressed to the Congress of the United States, by the said eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, was not intended to include said Pima County bonds, and should not have been construed to include said Pima County bonds, as by reference to said copy of said memorial (hereto attached) and a memorial addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled by the twentieth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, known as House Memorial No. 1 (a copy of which is hereto attached), will clearly appear. That the Congress of the United States misconstrued the aforesaid memorial of the eighteenth legislative assembly and validated these notorious bonds, without request or solicitation on the part of the people of Pima and Santa Cruz counties, and thereby imposed upon said people of said counties an unjust and most grievous burden, for which said people of said counties have never received any benefit or advantage whatever. That your memorialists believe, and on behalf of the people of Pima and Santa Cruz counties solemnly assert, that the Congress of the United States is in duty bound now to intervene and relieve the people of said Pima and Santa Cruz counties from the payment of all of said bonds, so as aforesaid by the Congress of the United States legalized and validated.

Wherefore your memorialists, on behalf of the people of said Pima and Santa Cruz counties, beg to request and urge your honorable bodies to forthwith jointly memorialize the Congress of the United States now in session to grant an appropriation sufficient to cover the sum total of the aforesaid bonds and accrued interest, to the end that the same may be forthwith paid, discharged, and canceled, and not funded by the said loan commission of Arizona.

Adopted by unanimous vote of the members of the board of supervisors of Pima and Santa Cruz counties, respectively, in joint session, held in the city of Tucson, Ariz., this 17th day of February, A. D. 1903.

ANDRIES A. EBELL,
Chairman of Board of Supervisors of Pima County.
RICHARD FARRELL,
Chairman of Board of Supervisors of Santa Cruz County.

[Seal, Board of supervisors Pima County.]
Attest:
JOHN METS,
Clerk of Board of Supervisors of Pima County.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to submit to your honorable bodies that—

Whereas under various acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona certain of the counties of the Territory were authorized to issue in aid of railroads and other quasi public improvements and did under such acts issue bonds, which said bonds were sold in open market, in most instances at their face value, and are now held at home and abroad by persons who, in good faith, invested their money in the same, and, save and except such knowledge as the law imputes to the holder of bonds issued under authorized acts, are holders of the same; and

Whereas the validity of these bonds for many years after their issuance was unquestioned, and acknowledged by the payment of the interest thereon as it fell due; and

Whereas there has recently been raised a question as to whether these acts of the legislative assembly were valid under the organic law of the Territory, which had led to a movement looking to the repudiation of the indebtedness created under and by virtue of such acts; and

Whereas we believe that such repudiation would, under the circumstances, work great wrong and hardship to the holders of such bonds, and at the same time seriously affect the credit and standing of our people for honesty and fair dealing and bring us into disrepute:

Wherefore we most strongly urge upon your most honorable bodies the propriety and justice of passing such curative and remedial legislation as will protect the holders of all bonds issued under the authority of acts of the legislative assembly, the validity of which has heretofore been acknowledged, and that you further legislate as to protect all innocent parties having entered into contracts resulting from inducements offered by our Territorial legislation, and relieve the people of the Territory from the disastrous effects that must necessarily follow any repudiation of good faith on the part of the Territory, and that you may so further legislate as to validate all acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory which have held out inducements for the investment of capital within the Territory, and which have led to the investment of large sums of money in enterprises directly contributing to the development and growth of the Territory, and thus relieve the honest people of the Territory from the disastrous effects that must necessarily follow any violation of good faith on the part of our people.

Resolved, That our Delegate to Congress be, and he is hereby, instructed to use all honorable means to bring this subject to the earnest consideration of Congress; that the secretary of the Territory be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing to each House of Congress and to our Delegate in Congress.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 25, 1890, and August 3, 1894, authorizing the funding of certain indebtedness of the Territory of Arizona, are hereby amended and extended so as to authorize the funding of all outstanding obligations of said Territory, and the counties, municipalities, and school districts thereof, as provided in the act of Congress approved June 25, 1890, until January 1, 1897, and all outstanding bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness of the Territory of Arizona, and the counties, municipalities, and school districts thereof, heretofore authorized by legislative enactments of said Territory, bearing a higher rate of interest than is authorized by the aforesaid funding act approved June 25, 1890, and which said bonds, warrants, and other evidences of indebtedness have been sold or exchanged in good faith in compliance with the terms of the acts of the legislature by which they were authorized, shall be funded, with the interest thereon which has accrued and may accrue until funded into the lower interest-bearing bonds as provided by this act.

SEC. 2. That all bonds and other evidences of indebtedness heretofore funded by the loan commission of Arizona under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1890, and the act amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, approved August 3, 1894, are hereby declared to be valid and legal for the purposes for which they were issued and funded; and all bonds and other evidences of indebtedness heretofore issued under the authority of the legislature of said Territory, as hereinbefore authorized to be funded, are hereby confirmed, approved, and validated, and may be funded as in this act provided until January 1, 1897: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to make the Government of the United States liable or responsible for the payment of any of said bonds, warrants, or other evidences of indebtedness by this act approved, confirmed, and made valid, and authorized to be funded.

Approved June 6, 1896.

House memorial No. 1.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, beg leave to submit to your honorable body that—

Whereas a memorial was presented to your honorable bodies by the eighteenth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona regarding bonds issued by certain counties of said Territory, which memorial was intended to apply only to such bonds as had been bought in good faith, and interest on which had been paid as stated in the aforesaid memorial; and

Whereas in response to said memorial your honorable bodies thereafter passed the act entitled "An act amending and extending the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'An act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona,' approved June 6, 1896;" and

Whereas, based on said memorial, an act of June 6, 1896, the Supreme Court of the United States has recently rendered a decision tending to recognize the validity of certain bonds issued by Pima County, Ariz., to the Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad, under the provisions of the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona approved February 1, 1883; and

Whereas before the passage of said memorial said bonds had been declared unauthorized and void by the district court of the first judicial district of the Territory of Arizona, in and for Pima County, by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Lewis v. The County of Pima, decided in the Supreme Court of the United States at its October, 1894, term; and

Whereas said bonds issued to said Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad Company were never acquired by said county in good faith, and were never sold by it in good faith or for a valuable consideration, and none of the interest on said bonds had ever been acknowledged by said county; and

Whereas the said Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad was never built and never existed, and Pima County has never received any consideration whatever for the said so-called bonds, and the entire scheme of the said bond issue was a fraud, without any element of merit or good faith; and

Whereas all the foregoing facts were and are notorious and within the knowledge of everyone who has ever had any dealings with said bonds; and

Whereas it was by all the members of the legislature passing said memorial, and by the governor of Arizona at the time, and by the then Delegate in Congress from Arizona, believed that all of said bonds so issued by Pima County to the Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad Company were res adjudicata by the said decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that none of the said bonds could be thereafter validated; and

Whereas said memorial was intended to apply only to certain railway-aid bonds of two other counties in Arizona where the aided railways were actually constructed, and not to the said bonds so issued by Pima County, as to which none of the statements or reasons in said memorial applied, and which bonds were then, as now, believed to be without consideration, unjust, fraudulent, and void:

Therefore we most strongly urge upon the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America to pass such legislation as will exclude from the provisions of the act of Congress of June 6, 1896, and from any and all other legislation by Congress, the said bonds so issued by Pima County to the Arizona Narrow Gauge Railroad Company, so that neither said act of June 6, 1896, or any other act will be construed so as to validate the said bonds issued by Pima County; and it is further

Resolved, That our Delegate to Congress be, and is hereby, instructed to use all proper means to bring this subject to the careful and immediate consideration of Congress, in order to secure, if possible, from Congress such legislation as is prayed for herein, and that the secretary of the Territory be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to each House of Congress and to our Delegate in Congress.

Passed and adopted by the council of the twenty-second legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, February 20, 1903.

EUGENE S. IVES,
President of the Council.

Indorsed: Council memorial No. 1, by Mr. Corbett. In council, adopted unanimously, February 20, 1903, J. C. Evans, chief clerk. February 20, 1903, house adopted memorial by unanimous vote, C. W. There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial. A memorial asking an appropriation of $75,000 for irrigation purposes.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and the legislature of the State of Utah, represent that the Office of Irrigation Investigations of the United States Department of Agriculture has been working toward the betterment of irrigation in this State; that the studies of the nature of water rights and the effects of litigation on the character, capacity, and management of ditches, and the determination of the amount of water used in irrigation, together with the acreage and value of irrigated crops, are, and must continue to be, of immediate assistance to the people of this State. We therefore respectfully ask that the Office of Irrigation Investigations of the Department of Agriculture be allowed an appropriation of $75,000 at the present session of Congress.

THOMAS HULL,
Speaker of the House.
EDWARD M. ALLISON, JR.,
President of the Senate.

Approved this 20th day of February, 1903.

HEBER M. WELLS, Governor.

Mr. KITTREDGE presented the petition of G. H. Brown and 65 other citizens of Northville, S. He also presented a petition of sundry patrons of the Brightwood avenue car line, in the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for an improved service on that line; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of the Department of Vermont, Grand Army of the Republic, of Rutland, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference in civil-service appointments to veterans of the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. DUBOIS. I present a memorial of the legislature of the State of Idaho and I ask that it be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. WARREN. Let it be spread upon the record without taking the time to read it at the desk.

Mr. DUBOIS. It should be read, I think, under the rule. I should like to have it read.

The memorial was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

[Certificate of certified copy.]

STATE OF IDAHO, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Will H. Gibson, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 2, by Werner; which was filed in this office the 19th day of February, A. D. 1903, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.]

WILL H. GIBSON,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 2, by Werner. Joint memorial of the Idaho legislature against the extension and enlargement of the Bitter Root Forest Reserve in Idaho.

SECTION 1. Be it resolved, That the Idaho legislature protest against the proposed enlargement or extension of the Bitter Root Forest Reserve, and request our Senators and Representative in Congress to use their best endeavors to prevent such enlargement and extension for the following reasons: Said reserve as already existing takes in a very large area of the central part of this State, thus absolutely preventing the settlement and development of a tract of land almost as large as the largest county in Idaho. The proposed extension would enlarge this reserve to almost double its present area. Such proposed extension covers almost entirely the watershed of the Salmon River and its tributaries. The timber growing on this extension is almost exclusively black pine or other timber of a nonmerchantable character, and is not used for lumbering purposes. Much of the proposed extension is not covered with timber at all. It embraces several valleys capable of agriculture, which under the law, if this extension is made, can never be improved or cultivated. The enlargement of this reserve would embrace the Thunder Mountain country, and under the law, while mining locations are permitted on these reserves, yet the development of mining camps is very much hampered and retarded. Salmon River is not a stream used for irrigation, nor is it one where damage from flood waters has occurred in the past; therefore the reasons usually existing for the creation of these reserves are absent from this case. A large part of this proposed extension is almost exclusively a grazing and mining country, and under the law all live stock can be shut out of these reserves as soon as they are created. In the opinion of your memorialists, the Idaho legislature, the extension and enlargement of this reserve would not serve any of the beneficent purposes supposed to attach ordinarily to the creation of forest reserves, but would work irreparable harm and injury to the State of Idaho by effectually preventing the settlement and development of this large area.

SEC. 2. For the foregoing reasons your memorialists, the Idaho legislature, respectfully petition the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior against the enlargement and extension of the Bitter Root Forest Reserve, as now proposed by the Interior Department.

SEC. 3. Resolved, That a properly certified copy of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and to the Senators and Representative of this State in the Congress of the United States.

This joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 4th day of February, 1903.

JAMES F. HUNT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This joint memorial passed the senate on the 17th day of February, 1903.

JAMES M. STEVENS,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 2 originated in the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho during the seventh session.

ROBT. M. MCCRACKEN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

State of Idaho: Received and filed February 19, 1903.

WILL H. GIBSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the Department of Wisconsin, Grand Army of the Republic, of Madison, Wis., praying for the enactment of legislation giving preference in the civil service to veterans of the civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

POTTOWAUTOMIE INDIANS OF WISCONSIN.

Mr. QUARLES. I present a memorial of the Pottowautomie Indians of Wisconsin, praying that consideration be given their claims for proportionate shares of the tribal annuities, interest on trust funds, and other moneys and estates of the Pottowautomie Nation of Indians. I move that the memorial be printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

THE A. H. EMERY ELEVATING CARRIAGE.

Mr. TELLER. I present the statement of A. H. Emery on an amendment submitted by me, intended to be proposed to the fortifications appropriation bill, relative to the erection and completion by Mr. Emery of a 12-inch elevating carriage. I move that the statement be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $100 to compensate the clerk of the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives for compiling three memorial addresses of the life and character of Abraham Lincoln by Hon. George Bancroft; James A. Garfield by Hon. James G. Blaine, and William McKinley by Hon. John Hay, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably the bill (S. 7430) authorizing the recorder of the General Land Office to issue certain copies of patents, records, books, and papers. As this is a very short bill and rather an important one, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What is the request of the Senator from North Dakota?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the bill be now considered.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator will not object. The Department is very anxious to have this legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not intend to object, Mr. President, to the introduction of petitions, memorials, reports of committees, and bills, but I must object to unanimous consent being given for the consideration of any legislation until the Senate shall have had an opportunity to say whether or not it wants to consider what is known as the antitrust bill, which, in my judgment, is a matter of as much concern and interest to the American people as any measure before this Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. From the Committee on Public Lands, I submit the views of the minority to accompany the bill (S. 6363) to repeal the act providing for the sale of timber and stone lands, the desert land act, and the commutation provision of the homestead act, which I ask may be printed as a part of the Senate report No. 3166.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16734) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7280) to provide an American register for the cable-repairing ship Scotia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7273) to provide an American register for the British ship Pyrenees, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PENROSE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13075) to amend section 3 of the "Act further to prevent counterfeiting or manufacturing of dies, tools, or other implements used in manufacturing," etc., approved February 10, 1891, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance, for trial and service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment authorizing the payment to the widow and children of the late Joseph W. Etheridge, late superintendent of the Sixth life-saving station, a sum equal to two years' pay of a district superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, and also a like amount to the widow of the late John M. Richardson, late superintendent of the First life-saving district, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in cloth 2,500 copies of the report on the Sixth International Prison Congress (House Document No. 374, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session), of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the Department of State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 7437) for the relief of the estate of W. M. O'Hara, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7438) for the relief of John W. Lewis, late captain, Fourth Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 7439) for the relief of the estate of Henry Fassman, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7440) for the relief of the estate of Frederick Fuhr, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7441) for the relief of the estates of Nathaniel and William Offutt, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 7442) for the relief of Theodore J. Eckerson, major, United States Army, retired; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7443) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hamell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7444) authorizing the North American Telegraph and Cable Company to construct a submarine cable; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TILLMAN introduced a bill (S. 7445) to provide for the appointment of a district judge for the western judicial district of South Carolina, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,983.06 to pay Durham W. Stevens for services rendered as chargé d'affaires ad interim of the United States at Tokio, Japan, from October 25, 1878, to May 21, 1879, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 to be expended by the Princeton Battlefield Monument Association of New Jersey, to aid in erecting and completing a suitable monument on the battlefield of Princeton, in that State, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500 to pay the widow of S. W. Thome, late consul of the United States at Asuncion, Paraguay, South America, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state an account with the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railway Company for transporting the United States mails under its present corporate name and under its former corporate name, the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company, over postal routes numbered 24018 and 137018, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the examination of the refunding claim of the Eastern Railroad Company of Massachusetts, under the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901, to audit and report the amount of taxes illegally collected under the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862, June 30, 1864, and July 14, 1870, and amendments thereof, from the Boston and Maine Railroad Company and the Eastern Railroad Company of Massachusetts, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to examine the claim of Messrs. Gallatly, Hankey & Co., of London, England, owners of the British steamship Mogul, for damages alleged to be due them by reason of the collision between that steamship and the U. S. transport Warren in Manila Bay, December 30, 1900, and to determine what damages, if any, are due them, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,547.25 to reimburse the Washington Market Company for furnishing and putting in place 1,072 lockers in the new armory quarters over Center Market, and also $800 to reimburse the Washington Market Company for extraordinary repairs to quarters vacated by the national guard of the District of Columbia, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,929.45 to pay the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah, Ga., in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress approved February 18, 1893, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $766.66 to pay Parker Williams the difference between the pay of an assistant elevator conductor and that of an elevator conductor from September 1, 1899, to June 30, 1903, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $282,943.88, being the amount reported by the Commissioners of the Court of Claims for services actually performed by certain letter carriers in excess of eight hours per day, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretaries of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments to pay certain permanent and temporary employees of their respective departments for work performed by them in excess of the regular working hours during the period of the war with Spain, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment providing for the relief of holders and owners of certain District of Columbia special-tax scrip, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PARK SYSTEM OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, it was Ordered, That 500 copies of Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, be printed and bound in cloth for the use of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

STATISTICS OF CRIME.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask for a reprint of Senate Document No. 11, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, being statistics of crime, suicide, insanity, and other forms of abnormality. The Senate has ordered this document printed a second time, and as both editions are entirely exhausted, I move that a reprint be ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS subsequently said: I move that the vote by which the motion made by me for a reprint of the document relative to statistics of crime, suicide, and insanity was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I now move that the motion to reprint be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriaton bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Maine to allow the motion to reconsider the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill to be disposed of. It has tied up the bill, and I wish to have the motion disposed of so that the matter can go to the other House.

Mr. HALE. I have been notified that when that question comes up it will be debated at length. I know the Senator, who is an old Senator here, will see the importance of getting the naval appropriation bill through first, so that it can go to the other House and into conference.

Mr. STEWART. I will move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table if the Senator will allow me to call it up. We can take the yeas and nays on the motion now without debate.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that it will be debated.

Mr. STEWART. If there was going to be reasonable debate that might be allowed; but the Senator from North Dakota says he proposes to debate it for a day.

Mr. HALE. I can not consent to anything coming in. The pending bill will not take a great while, and the Senator from Nevada will have ample time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to page 2, line 14.

Mr. HALE. After the word "mates," in line 4, I move an amendment which only changes the language of an amendment in another part of the bill.

The SECRETARY. After the word "mates," line 4, page 2, strike out the semicolon and insert a comma and the following:

And also naval constructors and assistant naval constructors: Provided, That hereafter naval constructors and assistant naval constructors shall receive the same allowances as provided by existing law for officers of the line, Pay, and Medical Corps of the corresponding rank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The first amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Emergency Fund, Navy Department," on page 4, line 4, to reduce the appropriation to meet unforeseen contingencies for the maintenance of the Navy constantly arising, to be expended at the discretion of the President, from $40,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Navigation," on page 4, line 17, to reduce the appropriation for the transportation of enlisted men and apprentices at home and abroad; transportation and subsistence en route to their homes, if residents of the United States, etc., from $221,429 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 4, line 22, to reduce the appropriation for expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same, etc., from $88,571 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, under the subhead "Contingent," to reduce the appropriation for freight, telegraphing on public business, postage on letters sent abroad, etc., from $27,679 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Ordnance," in the appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores, on page 9, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the unexpended balances remaining in the Treasury on June 30, 1903, from the appropriations "Ordnance and ordnance stores," 1900 and 1901, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby reappropriated and made available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, for expenditure in fulfillment of contracts heretofore made and properly chargeable to said appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Equipment," on page 15, after line 15, to insert:

Depots for coal: For depots for coal, $250,000.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 25, line 18, the last paragraph read embracing items for navy-yard, Boston, Mass.

Mr. HALE. In line 16, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Power and heating plant, to be immediately available, $230,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I move, also, after the word "Boston," in line 17, and before the word "dollars," in line 18, to strike out "two hundred and ninety thousand five hundred" and insert "five hundred and twenty thousand five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. After line 18, I move to insert:

Four dry docks: The limit of cost of the granite and concrete dry docks at the navy-yards, Portsmouth, N. H., and Boston, Mass., fixed by the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes," is hereby increased from $1,100,000 each to $1,150,000 and $1,225,000, respectively.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the chairman of the committee give us the basis of this increase?

Mr. HALE. It is an estimate which came in after the committee had considered the bill. It came in from the Department and from the head of the Bureau of Civil Engineering. So I have put it in here in order that it may be open in conference.

Mr. TILLMAN. I knew it had not been considered by the committee, and I thought it must be something recent.

Mr. HALE. There are three or four items which came in in that way.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed at page 25, line 19. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks, navy-yards and stations, Naval Academy, and New Naval Observatory," on page 28, after line 6, to insert:

Navy-yard, Charleston, S. C.: Power house and fuel storage for construction and repair, to complete, $45,000; machine shop for construction and repair, to complete, $30,000; joiners' shop for construction and repair, to complete, $30,000; machine shop for steam engineering, $60,000; power house for steam engineering, $25,000; in all, $300,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and hereby is, authorized to reconvey to the city of Charleston, S. C., a small triangular piece of land in the northern extremity of the tract recently purchased by the United States for the purposes of a navy-yard in the vicinity of Charleston, S. C., containing about one-thirtieth of an acre, at the same rate per acre as that at which said lands were conveyed to the United States by the said city of Charleston.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "plumber and sheet-metal workers' shop, $75,000;" and in line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and ninety-three" and insert "two hundred and sixty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Norfolk, Va.: Quay wall for fitting-out basin, $75,000; railroad tracks, extensions, $5,000; machinery and tools for yards and docks, additional, $3,000; electric capstans for dry docks, additional, $5,000; cistern, $20,000; landing float and slip for railroad cars,$40,000; improvements to storehouse building No. 15, $15,000; enlarging canvas shed for storage of chain, $30,000; plumber and sheet-metal workers' shop, $75,000; in all, navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., $268,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out "in all, navy-yard, Mare Island, $50,000," and insert:

Railroad system, extensions, $10,000; electric plant, extensions, $50,000; light and power station building, $40,000; moving and improving building No. 113, $12,000; fittings for chapel, $1,000; extension to electrical workshop, $25,000; in all, navy-yard, Mare Island, $188,000: Provided, That the balances from any appropriations for dredging be reappropriated for "Dredging or other means of deepening the channel in Mare Island Strait."

So as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.: Medical dispensary, to complete, $2,000; repairing 40-ton crane track, $16,000; completing and extending timber storage, $4,000; storage tank for oil, $12,000; locomotive crane, $12,000; remodeling chain shed, $4,000; railroad system, extensions, $10,000; electric plant, extensions, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out "in all, navy-yard, Pensacola, $23,000," and insert:

Building for Bureau of Equipment, $120,000; in all, navy-yard, Pensacola, $143,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Pensacola, Fla.: Crib for floating dry dock, $10,000; dredging, to continue, $10,000; electric-light plant, additions, $3,000; building for Bureau of Equipment, $120,000; in all, navy-yard, Pensacola, $143,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "ice-making plant, $5,000;" and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-four" and insert "thirty-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Tutuila: Grading and filling, to continue, $20,000; waterworks and accessories, $5,000; carpenter and blacksmith shop, $5,000; mooring, shoal, and channel buoys, $4,000; ice-making plant, $5,000; in all, naval station, Tutuila, $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for public works from $3,757,940 to $4,411,940.

Mr. HALE. There should be an amendment made there to correct the total.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 20, before the word "dollars," strike out "four million four hundred and eleven thousand" and insert "four million six hundred and forty-one thousand."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Navigation," on page 33, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "exclusive of amounts necessary for the purchase of additional lands;" and in line 10, after the word "plans," to strike out "heretofore authorized covering all buildings and improvements as he may see fit" and insert:

Or estimates of cost, within said limit, for all such buildings and improvements, including the hospital and dredging authorized in the act approved July 1, 1902, as he may see fit.

So as to make the clause read:

Naval Academy: The limit of expenditure for the construction of buildings and other necessary improvements at the Academy, as set forth in the act of June 7, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $10,000,000, exclusive of amounts necessary for the purchase of additional lands. The Secretary of the Navy may modify or alter all plans or estimates of cost, within said limit, for all such buildings and improvements, including the hospital and dredging authorized in the act approved July 1, 1902, as he may see fit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 18, after the word "hall," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Repairs, Naval Academy: For building and furnishing additional temporary quarters and recitation rooms and for enlarging and furnishing the mess hall, to be immediately available, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 19, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, and William L. Marcy, of Annapolis, Md., are hereby appointed a commission to ascertain the sites of, and to have erected suitable tablets upon, the historic places within the grounds of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., and the sum of $500 is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for public works, Bureau of Navigation, from $296,250 to $296,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public works, Bureau of Ordnance," on page 35, line 12, after the word "Congress," to insert:

And to defray the expenses of said board the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

New England naval magazine: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a board of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to recommend a site or sites for one naval magazine on the New England coast, north of Cape Cod, suitable for the use of the Boston and Portsmouth navy-yards; and, if upon private land, to estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and also to estimate the cost of necessary buildings, grading, and filling in, building roads and walks, improvement of water front, necessary wharves and cranes, railroad tracks and rolling stock, fire and water service, and for general equipment of said naval magazine. The board shall make a full and detailed report to the Secretary of the Navy, who shall transmit such report, with his recommendations thereon, to the next session of Congress. And to defray the expenses of said board the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 19, after the word "dollars," to strike out "sulphuric acid plant, consisting of the necessary buildings and apparatus for making sulphuric acid, $40,000," and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval proving ground, Indian Head, Maryland: Three new cast-steel gun platforms, $4,500; lightning protection, $6,000; in all, naval proving ground, Indian Head, $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 2, to reduce the total appropriation for public works, Bureau of Ordnance, from $121,800 to $86,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," on page 39, after line 2, to insert:

Naval hospital, Washington, D. C.: The erection and completion of new buildings for the accommodation of the United States naval hospital, Washington, D. C., on the grounds belonging to the United States Naval Museum of Hygiene, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 17, to insert:

Army and Navy Hospital, Fort Bayard, N. Mex.: That $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the enlargement of the Army General Hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., to accommodate the sick of the Navy afflicted with tuberculosis, and that this hospital shall hereafter be known as the Army and Navy Hospital and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations now in force for the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Supplies and accounts," on page 40, line 23, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three million five hundred thousand" and insert "four million," and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That of the $3,250,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1901, for "Provisions, Navy," for the fiscal year 1902, the sum of $500,000 of the unexpended balance be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated, which amount the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to transfer from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy, 1902," to the naval-supply fund;"

So as to make the clause read:

Provisions, Navy: For provisions and commuted rations for the seamen and marines, which commuted rations may be paid to caterers of messes, in cases of death or desertion, upon orders of the commanding officers, commuted rations for officers on sea duty (other than commissioned officers of the line, Medical and Pay corps, and chief boatswains, chief gunners, chief sailmakers, chief carpenters, and midshipmen), and commuted rations stopped on account of sick in hospital and credited to the naval-hospital fund; subsistence of officers and men unavoidably detained or absent from vessels to which attached under orders (during which subsistence rations to be stopped on board ship and no credit for commutation therefor to be given); labor in general storehouses and paymasters' offices in navy-yards, including naval stations maintained in island possessions under the control of the United States, and expenses in handling stores purchased under the navalsupply fund; 1 chemist, at $2,500 per annum, and 2 chemists, at $2,000 each per annum, $4,000,000: Provided, That of the $3,250,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1901, for "Provisions, Navy," for the fiscal year 1902, the sum of $500,000 of the unexpended balance be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated, which amount the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to transfer from the appropriation "Provisions, Navy, 1902," to the naval-supply fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 16, on page 41.

Mr. HALE. After line 16, I move to insert as a new paragraph the following:

Clothing and small stores fund: For purchase of clothing and small stores for issue to the naval service, the present fund being inadequate to meet the requirements of the service at this time, to be added to the clothing and small-stores fund, $1,000,000:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Construction and Repair," on page 50, line 4, after the word "service," to insert:

Provided, That officers in the construction corps, when not occupying public quarters, shall be entitled to commutation of quarters.

So as to make the clause read:

In all, civil establishment, Bureau of Construction and Repair, $27,024.25; and no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment for such service: Provided, That officers in the construction corps, when not occupying public quarters, shall be entitled to commutation of quarters.

Mr. HALE. That amendment has been inserted in another place, so that it should be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Steam Engineering," on page 51, line 18, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Civil establishment, Bureau of Steam Engineering: Navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: One clerk to department, at $1,400; 1 messenger, at $600; in all, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

One professor of mathematics, 1 of chemistry, 1 of French, 1 of Spanish, and 1 of English, at $2,500 each; 3 professors, namely, 1 of English, 1 of French, and 1 of drawing, at $2,200 each; 10 instructors, at $1,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "1 assistant librarian, at $1,000;" in line 5, after the word "each," to insert "1 clerk to the Superintendent, at $1,000;" in line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert "1 clerk to the paymaster, at $1,000;" and on page 55, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

One sword master, at $1,500; 1 assistant, at $1,200, and 2 assistants, at $1,000 each; 1 instructor in gymnastics, at $1,200; 1 assistant librarian, at $1,800; 1 assistant librarian, at $1,000; 1 secretary to the Naval Academy, at $1,800; 2 clerks to the Superintendent, at $1,200 each; 1 clerk to the Superintendent, at $1,000; 1 clerk to the commandant of midshipmen, at $1,200; 1 clerk to the paymaster, at $1,200; 1 clerk to the paymaster, at $1,000; 1 dentist, at $1,600; 1 baker, at $600; 1 mechanic in department of physics, at $730; 1 mechanic in the department of ordnance, $951.52; 1 cook, at $325.50; 1 messenger to Superintendent, at $600; 1 armorer, at $649.50; 1 chief gunner's mate, at $529.50; 1 quarter gunner, at $469.50; 1 coxswain, at $469.50; 1 seaman in the department of seamanship, at $397.50; 1 attendant in the department of navigation and 1 in the department of physics, at $300 each; 8 attendants at recitation rooms, library, store, chapel, armory, and offices, at $300 each; 1 bandmaster, at $1,080; 21 first-class musicians, at $420 each; 7 second-class musicians, at $360 each; services of organist at chapel, $300; in all, $80,442.52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 22, before the word "additional," to strike out "thirty" and insert, "five additional medical inspectors; twenty-five;" so as to read:

The grades of the active list of the Navy hereinafter designated shall be so increased that there shall be 30 additional lieutenant-commanders, in all 200; 50 additional lieutenants, in all 350; such total numbers of lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns as may qualify for said grades under existing law and the provisions of this act; 5 additional medical inspectors; 25 additional surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-commander, in all 85, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 19, after the word "midshipman," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That immediately upon the passage of this act each Senator, Representative, and Delegate who has not had an appointment during the Fifty-seventh Congress, or in whose State, Territory, or District a vacancy shall exist on or before March 4, 1903, shall be permitted to recommend one midshipman to the said Naval Academy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 2, to insert:

That the provisions of this act for the increase of appointments of midshipmen to the Naval Academy shall continue in force until the 30th day of June, 1909; and thereafter one midshipman, as now provided by law, shall be appointed for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 8, to insert:

That hereafter there shall be at the Naval Academy one midshipman from Porto Rico, who shall be a native of said island, and whose appointment shall be made by the President on the recommendation of the governor of Porto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 12, to insert:

That hereafter all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy at the time of their examination must be between the ages of 17 and 20 years, inclusive.

Mr. HALE. In line 13, after the word "That," I move to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after July 1, 1903."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 13, after the word "That," it is proposed to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after July 1, 1903;" so as to make the clause read:

That after July 1, 1903, all candidates for admission to the Naval Academy at the time of their examination must be between the ages of 17 and 20 years, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 63, line 4, before the word "years'," to strike out "ten" and insert "seven;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That officers selected for appointment to fill vacancies in the grade of field officers in any of the staff departments shall be taken from officers on the active list not below the grade of captain and who have seen not less than seven years' service as commissioned officers in the Marine Corps. And that appointments to the grade of captain in any of the staff departments shall be made from officers on the active list of the Marine Corps not below the grade of first lieutenant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, after line 8, to insert:

That the sergeant-majors and the 10 senior quartermaster-sergeants now holding rank in the Marine Corps shall be known as staff sergeant-majors and staff quartermaster-sergeants, respectively, and that vacancies hereafter occurring in the grades of staff sergeant-major and staff quartermaster-sergeant shall be filled by promotion from the noncommissioned officers not below the rank of sergeant, and who have served at least five years in the Marine Corps, and who are not over 35 years of age, after passing such physical, moral, mental, and professional examination as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

That such staff sergeant-majors and staff quartermaster-sergeants shall receive the same pay and allowances as warrant officers of the Navy when at sea: And provided also, That after ten years from date of warrant the staff sergeant-majors and staff quartermaster-sergeants shall be commissioned to rank with but after second lieutenants and shall have the same pay and allowances as second lieutenants of the Marine Corps: Provided also, That the law pertaining to the retirement of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps is hereby made applicable to the staff sergeant-majors and staff quartermaster-sergeants herein provided for.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order on the two new paragraphs beginning on page 63, line 9, and extending to line 5, on page 64, that they are new legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, of course they are new legislation, but as there is a great deal of new legislation in this bill, I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not shut the door of hope in the faces of some privates and subordinate officers and prevent any rise or any stimulus to ambition for that class of men.

We have in the law governing the Army some similar provision by which men from the ranks, who stand the necessary examination and show their fitness and qualifications, can be promoted to the line and become officers, and may even become generals if they show the necessary ability and character. I therefore hope the Senator from Minnesota will not insist upon his point of order. If he does I shall ask the President pro tempore to submit the question to the Senate.

This is a provision which, as I have said, allows certain subordinate officers of the Marine Corps, after passing the necessary examination and being in the service ten years, to become officers of the line. That is about the sum and substance of it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not insist upon the point of order. If he is disposed to raise points of order of this character upon provisions in this bill, he can do it in scores of places.

This amendment was introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. After a struggle in that committee they placed it in this bill. It simply extends the right to enlisted men of the Marine Corps which the men now have in the Navy of the United States.

It is un-American, Mr. President, and contrary to the spirit of our institutions to say that when men enlist in the military or naval service of the United States the door of hope shall be forever shut to them for advancement and promotion. This amendment is simply to give meritorious men enlisted in the Marine Corps some slight measure of opportunity to advance themselves in their chosen profession. I am sure that no Senator in this body can defend himself before the general body of the American people who will vote to sustain any longer in this important branch of the Navy of the United States a system of class and of separation in the service which renders promotion forever impossible to enlisted men.

I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not press his point of order at this time. If any member of the Senate has any doubt about the scope or the effect of this amendment, I hold in my hand a memorandum giving sufficient reasons, in a concise form, for the adoption of the amendment, which I shall be glad to read for the benefit of the Senator from Minnesota or for the benefit of any Senator who may be in doubt as to the merits of this amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I simply wish to say to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that I know the principle embodied in this amendment finds a responsive echo in his own heart, for it depends upon the merit of the marine or of the soldier or the sailor whether he can be promoted. It gives him no special privileges; it only gives him the opportunity of receiving a commission in the Navy if he has the merit and possesses the physical and mental qualifications. It is the same principle which is embodied in the general Army law, that any soldier, for gallant services, who has the ability and has won his spurs on the battlefield, is commissioned as a lieutenant and may finally seek and obtain the highest position in the Army.

My friend from Minnesota won his epaulets on the battlefield, and all honor to him for it; but he went into the Army as a private soldier and fought gallantly for our country. I am sure he wants to give the sailor and the marine the same opportunity of winning honor which he had while he was in the Army of the United States.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I have made this point of order not because I am hostile to the principle involved in the amendment, but to emphasize the fact of what I conceive is an unjust discrimination of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I offered an amendment to the naval appropriation bill to cover a defect in existing law. It was a meritorious amendment, as everybody conceded, and yet it was excluded on the ground that it was new legislation. The amendment which I offered was to meet a case which exists under the law. Where an officer is retired with a given rank, under the law, he can be put back on duty, and while on active duty after he is retired he gets less pay than when he is a retired officer not on duty.

I have a case in mind of an officer who was retired as a rear-admiral in the Navy. After he was retired the Department again called upon him to perform service under the law, and while he was performing that active service he got less pay to the extent of $630 a year than while he was on the retired list doing nothing. I offered an amendment to meet such a case, and that amendment, as I have stated, was excluded from the bill on the ground that it was new legislation.

I have made this point of order, Mr. President, not because I am hostile to this amendment—I am in favor of the principle—but to call the attention of the committee to the fact that while they have discriminated in one case, they have no scruples about inserting new legislation to suit any other case. They seem to have great conscientious scruples in one case which they entirely lack in the other.

I want to say to the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and to other Senators who coincide with them, that if they were as zealous to do justice in the other cases as in this case, it would meet my approval. I believe in the merit system, but as I have said, I call attention to this fact to show the unfair discrimination which the committee has manifested in this matter.

I now withdraw my point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum which I send to the desk in relation to this amendment may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

Memorandum in support of an amendment proposed by Mr. PENROSE to H. R. 17288. In the Senate of the United States, February 12, 1903. Referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

1. Some time prior to the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress the staff noncommissioned officers of the Marine Corps appointed Sergt. Maj. Thomas F. Hayes, United States Marine Corps, and Q. M. Sergt. George Carter, United States Marine Corps, a committee to represent their respective ranks. Said committee, provided with a draft of a bill and an argument in support thereof, called on the assistant adjutant and inspector, United States Marine Corps, and respectfully laid the matter before him; that officer, in turn, brought the matter to the attention of the commandant of the corps. After due deliberation the latter officer submitted to Congress the draft of a bill proposing an increase in the line and staff of the corps; also providing warrant rank for the sergeant-majors and the first (senior) 10 quartermaster-sergeants.

2. The Major-General Commandant, in his annual report to the Secretary of the Navy, dated September, 1902, pages 49 and 50, not only recommends but strongly urges the enactment of the proposed provision as being wise and necessary legislation, in view of the fact that it would hold out to deserving enlisted men an inducement to reinlist in the corps and strive for warrant rank; and, further, that such a law would tend to promote the efficiency and raise the standard of the enlisted strength.

3. The adjutant and inspector of the corps called the committee before him at a later date for the purpose of a definition of the duties that would devolve on a warrant officer in the corps, as understood by them. Quartermaster-Sergeant Carter replied that a staff quartermaster-sergeant should be on duty at each of the large posts of the corps, take charge of and be accountable for all quartermaster supplies thereat, and, under the direction of the commanding officer, transact all business of the Quartermaster's Department at the post, receive and receipt for all supplies, invite proposals for all necessary purchases, prepare and forward to the quartermaster all vouchers, and, in fact, perform all the duties performed by a post quartermaster in the Army. The adjutant and inspector heartily concurred in the proposition and expressed the opinion that the corps would be greatly benefited thereby.

4. The quartermaster of the corps in his testimony recently given before the House Naval Committee stated that the officers of the Quartermaster's Department are greatly overworked, and that more assistant quartermasters are needed; that there should be an assistant quartermaster on duty at each of the larger posts; that line officers are not familiar with the duties, etc. Now, there is not a doubt but the quartermaster is right, but if more assistant quartermasters are appointed they must come either from the line or from civil life. In either case they will not be equipped for their new duties, and will rely wholly on the quartermaster-sergeants for the proper discharge of their duties. Why not, then, slightly raise the rank of the quartermaster-sergeants, who are already familiar with the duties in all its details, broaden their authority, and extend their usefulness, and at one-third the cost of commissioned assistant quartermasters. In fact, no additional appropriation would be necessary to carry into effect Mr. PENROSE's amendment.

5. The advantages that would result from the enactment of this provision are too many to be entered into in detail. A staff sergeant-major would be of great assistance to the commanding officer of a post. He would be the post adjutant, relieving a line officer of that duty, attend to all matters of military detail, inspect applicants for enlistment, superintend the military instruction of recruits, and have charge of the clerical force of the commanding officer's office. The commanding officer, relieved of these various duties, could devote more time and greater care to matters of post administration proper. Staff quartermaster-sergeants, as indicated above, would receive and receipt for all quartermaster's supplies, and be accountable for same, relieving a line officer of these duties, who, as testified by the quartermaster of the corps, are not familiar with them. He would inspect the fuel, forage, rations, and, in fact, all supplies furnished by contractors, and, under the direction of the commanding officer, perform all the duties of a post quartermaster. These warrant officers should be bonded. Such an arrangement could not result other than in a great saving to the Government. Men thoroughly familiar with the duties would be placed in positions of trust and responsibility. It would be a matter of pride with each and every one that the affairs of his office should be conducted in such manner as would reflect credit on himself.

6. Each and every man intended to be benefited by Mr. PENROSE's amendment has served more than five years in the Marine Corps; some of them ten, fifteen, twenty, and even twenty-five years. No other avenue of promotion is open to them; they are barred by the age limit from competing for commissions, and, unless this measure is enacted, they lose all hope of just recognition for long and faithful service. Congress has been asked by the major-general commandant to recognize the faithful and efficient services of these men, and it is confidently hoped that the commandant's appeal will be met by favorable action on the part of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, under the subhead "Marine Corps," on page 64, line 9, to increase the appropriation for pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on the active list from $418,900 to $547,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 22, to increase the appropriation for pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, as prescribed by law, from $1,236,028 to $1,365,628.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unless it meet the disapproval of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 65, line 15.

Mr. HALE. Will not the Senator wait until we get through the reading of the bill and the consideration of committee amendments?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly. At the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I withhold my amendment, and shall offer it after the reading of the bill shall have been completed.

Mr. HALE. On page 66, line 18, after the word "force," I move to strike out "$26,978.75" and insert "$27,110.03." The amendment refers to the pay of the civil force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 66, line 24, after the words "Marine Corps," to strike out "one million eight hundred and thirty-nine" and insert "two million and ninety-seven;" and on page 67, line 1, after the word "thousand," to insert "six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, pay Marine Corps, $2,097,646.75.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by changing the total to "$2,097,778.03."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 67, line 10, to increase the appropriation for provisions for noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates serving ashore, for commutation of rations to enlisted men regularly detailed as clerks and messengers, etc., from $445,071.50 to $492,087.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 22, to increase the appropriation for clothing for noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, authorized by law, from $382,000 to $422,370.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 2, to increase the appropriation for fuel from $45,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 21, to increase the appropriation for military stores from $100,297 to $110,895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 2, to increase the appropriation for transportation and recruiting from $110,000 to $121,620.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 18, to increase the appropriation for repairs of barracks from $60,000 to $66,336.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 1, to increase the appropriation for forage from $16,000 to $17,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 14, to increase the appropriation for hire of quarters from $25,748 to $30,748.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 25, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses from $120,000 to $136,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase of the Navy," on page 72, after line 17, to strike out:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed or in navy-yards as hereinafter provided, three first-class battle ships carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class upon a trial displacement of not more than 16,000 tons, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,212,000 each; one first-class armored cruiser of not more than 14,500 tons trial displacement, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful armament for vessels of its class, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,659,000; two steel ships, to be used in training landsmen and apprentices, to be propelled by sail, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $370,000 each; one wooden brig, to be used for training landsmen and apprentices at stations, to be propelled by sail, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $50,000; and the contract for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all of said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment." as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic machinery; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, and shall build the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels, have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract 4 first-class battle ships, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class, of the general type of the Oregon, upon a trial displacement of not more than 12,000 tons, of a maximum draft and ready for service at sea of not more than 24 feet, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,200,000 each; 2 first-class armored cruisers, of the general type of the Brooklyn, not exceeding 9,500 tons displacement, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful armament for vessels of their class, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $2,750,000 each; 2 steel ships, to be used in training landsmen and apprentices, to be propelled by sail, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $370,000 each; 1 wooden brig, to be used for training landsmen and apprentices at stations, to be propelled by sail, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $50,000; and the contract for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded, by the Secretary of the Navy, to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all of said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic machinery; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and not more than 2 of the 6 battle ships and armored cruisers provided for in this act shall be built by one contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall build any or all the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels, have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. The amendment proposed by the committee, of course, makes a change in the system proposed by the House as between ships of 16,000 and 12,000 tons. Into that discussion I do not desire to enter now. There is a great deal that may be said, I suppose, on both sides. It is an open question. But, Mr. President, I think it is very undesirable to tie the Department down to any particular type, and I think we ought not to limit their plans whether the ship be small or large. Therefore I move to strike out of the amendment proposed by the committee on page 74, line 23, the words "of the general type of the Oregon," and in line 5, on page 75, the words "of the general type of the Brooklyn."

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment of the committee on page 74, line 23, after the word "class," it is proposed to strike out the words "of the general type of the Oregon;" and on page 75, line 5, after the word "cruisers," to strike out "of the general type of the Brooklyn."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not desire to now debate the question as to whether the programme in the Senate bill is the best one for the Government to adopt or that of the House of Representatives. I simply desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Naval Committee of the Senate has made a radical departure from the recommendation of the Bureau of Construction of the Navy Department, and the programme was outlined in the bill coming from the House of Representatives. At the proper time, when the conference committee reports to the Senate, I shall have something to say upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 76, line 23, after the word "purchase," to insert "subsurface or;" on page 77, line 2, before the word "submarine," to insert "subsurface or;" in line 3, before the word "submarine," to insert "subsurface or;" in line 4, after the word "before," to strike out "August" and insert "September;" in line 6, before the word "submarine," to insert "subsurface or;" in line 7, after the word "competitor," to insert "provided there be any such;" in line 11, before the word "submarine," to insert "subsurface or;" and in line 14, before the word "submarine," to insert "subsurface or;" so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase subsurface or submarine torpedo boats in the aggregate of, but not exceeding, $500,000: Provided, That prior to said purchase or contract for said boats any American inventor or owner of a subsurface or submarine torpedo boat may give reasonable notice and have his, her, or its subsurface or submarine torpedo boat tested before September 1, 1903, by comparison or competition, or both, with a Government subsurface or submarine torpedo boat or any private competitor, provided there be any such, and thereupon the board appointed for conducting such tests shall report the result of said competition or comparison, together with its recommendations, to the Secretary of the Navy, who may purchase or contract for subsurface or submarine torpedo boats in a manner that will best advance the interests of the United States in submarine warfare: And provided further, That before any subsurface or submarine torpedo boat is purchased or contracted for it shall be accepted by the Navy Department as fulfilling all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare and shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy. To carry out the purpose aforesaid the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 6 on page 78 of the bill. I wish to say that I hope the Committee on Naval Affairs will treat me as fairly as I treated them on the amendment as to which I made the point of order a while ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new paragraph the following:

That retired officers of the Navy ordered to active duty shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of officers of the active list of like length of active service, and if actively employed for three years after retirement shall, when detached from duty, retain the rank and highest retired pay of the rank they then hold: Provided, That the rank and pay of any officer on the retired list shall not hereby be reduced.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that amendment be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 2 on page 34.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to procure a suitable design for a monument to be erected in the Vicksburg National Military Park to the memory of the officers and sailors of the gunboat flotilla which served on the western rivers during the war of the rebellion; said design to cost not to exceed $500. And the Secretary of the Navy shall submit such design as meets his approval to Congress with an estimate of its cost, which shall not be in excess of $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 65.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 15, after the word "at," it is proposed to strike out "$840" and insert "$971.28;" so as to read:

Pay of civil force: In the office of the major-general commandant: One chief clerk, at $1,600; one clerk, at $1,200; one messenger, at $971.28.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where does the Senator desire the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. HALE. Let it be inserted immediately after the amendment which has just been adopted on motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, after the amendment just adopted, following line 2, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to cause to be erected at some suitable place in Arlington Cemetery a monument to Charles Vernon Gridley, late captain, United States Navy, commander of the flagship Olympia in the Asiatic Squadron in the battle of Manila Bay, he being the first officer of the United States Navy who lost his life in the line of duty during the late war with Spain, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that when the appropriation bill now before the Senate is disposed of, I shall call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes, which I submitted last night.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Permanent establishment," on page 2, line 6, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law, there shall be one from Porto Rico.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether it would not be a good plan to define how the cadet from Porto Rico shall be appointed, as it has just been defined in the naval bill? No definition is found here.

Mr. WARREN. It was the opinion of the committee that that could safely be left as it is. While it is not the law, the President permits the Delegates from the Territories to nominate. From Porto Rico we have no Delegate, but we have a resident commissioner.

Mr. LODGE. I know it; and the Naval Committee, in the bill just passed, provided that the naval cadet from Porto Rico should be appointed by the President on the recommendation of the governor. It seems to me that is a much better arrangement than to leave it to the commissioner, who is not a Delegate.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that there would be any special objection to it, and the Senator can prepare an amendment to that effect while we proceed with the reading of the bill, but I suggest that it would be a departure from the regular system as to Territories.

Mr. LODGE. Porto Rico is not a Territory.

Mr. WARREN. We assume it is for general purposes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator can hardly assume that. It is not a Territory, and it has not a Delegate.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator wants to prepare an amendment to that effect, I will not object.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me it will make it more harmonious, and then the provision will be as it is in the naval bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I was out of the Chamber. I should like to inquire what is under discussion.

Mr. LODGE. My suggestion was that this provision should be the same as it is in the naval bill, that the President shall appoint the cadet from Porto Rico on the recommendation of the governor.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to such a provision. I think perhaps——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We have a representative from Porto Rico, I understand.

Mr. LODGE. We have. He is not a Delegate.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is he not the Delegate in everything except title? He has the right to the floor. A Territorial Delegate has no right to vote. I want to ask why not let the cadet from Porto Rico be appointed by the President on the recommendation of that delegate or that representative?

Mr. LODGE. I think the system adopted by your committee is a better one; that is all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to it; but it seems to me the other course would be more in harmony.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me, also, we had better make it uniform with the appointment of naval cadets. I understand the Naval Committee reported that clause after consideration, and I think it did so wisely. I think the naval provision is a very wise one.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no earthly objection to it, but it seems to me it would be more in conformity with existing law if the cadets, both at the Military and the Naval Academy, should be appointed by the President on the recommendation of the legislative representative of Porto Rico.

Mr. SPOONER. He is not a legislative representative.

Mr. LODGE. He is not. He is a resident commissioner.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He is not a delegate by name, but he has under the law substantially all the rights which belong to a Delegate from a Territory.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Kentucky, if I correctly understood him, is in error in supposing that the commissioner from Porto Rico has the privileges of the floor of the two Houses.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I meant of the House.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh!

Mr. BLACKBURN. He has the privilege of the floor of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that we pass by this amendment until a satisfactory amendment can be prepared, if one be deemed necessary.

Mr. LODGE. I can offer the amendment immediately. It is right here. I propose to amend the provision so as to read:

One cadet from Porto Rico, who shall be appointed by the President on the recommendation of the governor of Porto Rico.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how the naval cadets are appointed from the Territories in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. They are appointed on the recommendation of the Delegate. The amendment I am giving you is similar to the one as to the naval cadet from Porto Rico.

Mr. WARREN. And you wish to have this provision correspond with it?

Mr. LODGE. That is the idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to inquire if there is any statute requiring that cadets to West Point shall be appointed upon the recommendation of anybody.

Mr. WARREN. No; there is not. It is absolutely with the President alone, if he so chooses.

Mr. LODGE. The President does not appoint. The cadets are appointed by the Senators and Representatives and Delegates.

Mr. PROCTOR. Not at all. They are appointed by the President of the United States on his own motion. There is no statute that I know of which requires that they shall be appointed on anybody's recommendation. By custom they are appointed upon the recommendation of the Senators and Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. They are.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think this would be a departure.

Mr. LODGE. We passed a statute giving each Senator a cadet at West Point.

Mr. PROCTOR. I beg pardon, Mr. President. We passed a statute giving two cadets at large from each State.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. My proposition exactly corresponds with that.

Mr. WARREN. You enact a statute which is not called for, because the custom is well established. It is better not to interfere with it by statute. Let it rest as it is.

Mr. LODGE. I have not the least desire to interfere by statute, but I understood the appointment was to be made on the recommendation of the resident commissioner. To that I object.

Mr. PROCTOR. The appointment is made by the President upon the recommendation of anybody whose recommendation he chooses to take or upon none; but, in fact, he takes, as to the Territories, the recommendations of the Delegates.

Mr. LODGE. This is wholly new. Porto Rico is not a Territory. What I want to avoid is having the cadet appointed on the recommendation of the resident commissioner, who is not a Delegate. We know well enough what our system is in both services.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think it would be unwise——

Mr. LODGE. The appointment should either be left entirely to the President, or to the President on the recommendation of the governor.

Mr. PROCTOR. This leaves it with the President.

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask the Senator a question. Does not this bill put Porto Rico in exactly the same condition of every State and Territory in regard to these appointments?

Mr. PROCTOR. This amendment does so.

Mr. HOAR. I mean the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. The President makes the appointment. He takes the recommendation of some Representative of the State or district or Territory, whose recommendation he is in the habit of following; but that is solely discretionary with him. If this language stand as it is, then Porto Rico will be situated just like Vermont or any Territory.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly. I think it would be very unwise to tie the President's hands to any particular recommendation in this case when they are not tied in any other case of the appointment of cadets.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to tie the President's hands, but I do not think by a side amendment of this kind we should change the status of Porto Rico, which has been pretty carefully defined.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly what the committee desire to avoid. If the amendment remains as the committee have recommended it, Porto Rico will stand precisely as every other Territory and every other district stands and the appointment will be made precisely as every other such appointment is made, with the exception that it is customary, though not the law, for the President to delegate to members of Congress the privilege of nominating some man from their district and to the Delegates from the Territories to nominate from the Territories. The President can delegate to the resident commissioner or to the governor the nomination of a man from Porto Rico the same as is done in the States and Territories.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely what I want to avoid is putting Porto Rico on the same ground as the States and Territories, because it is neither a State nor a Territory.

Mr. WARREN. Then let us have an understanding. There would then be legislation providing that one cadet at the Military Academy should be the nominee of a certain man, who is the governor of the Territory.

Mr. LODGE. No; I will leave that out, and provide that he shall be appointed by the President——

Mr. WARREN. That is the way it is now. The general law provides that the cadets shall be appointed by the President, and to say that there shall be one from Porto Rico accomplishes what the Senator from Massachusetts desires. The President can appoint him.

Mr. LODGE. If that is the case, there is not any need of adding these words.

Mr. WARREN. I think not.

Mr. LODGE. But I understood the object of framing it in this way was to give the appointment to the resident commissioner. That is what I want to avoid.

Mr. WARREN. Only through the courtesy of the President, or he could give it to the governor.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I inquire of the Senator having charge of this bill whether there is a cadet appointed from Alaska? I understood him to say that this is just the same as in each Territory and district.

Mr. WARREN. I meant the Congressional districts in the States——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh!

Mr. WARREN. From which the Representatives in Congress come.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I thought there was no provision for a cadet from the district of Alaska.

Mr. WARREN. There is none.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say that I think it would perhaps be more satisfactory if the words "to be appointed by the President" should be added. Then there could not be any question about it, and the President could act upon anybody's recommendation.

Mr. LODGE. That is it.

Mr. WARREN. It is entirely unnecessary, but there is no harm in it, and I accept it.

Mr. LODGE. If it is a mere repetition of existing law it can do no possible harm. I ask to modify my amendment so as it shall read: "One from Porto Rico, to be appointed by the President of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to have the amendment read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. If amended, the amendment will read:

Provided, That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law there shall be one from Porto Rico, to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am a little surprised that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], having made such a good point in regard to the uniformity of these appointments, should surrender. The President appoints them all. He appoints every cadet to Annapolis and West Point. This is to give an additional cadet at large, who shall come from Porto Rico and be a resident thereof; and it ought to be so stated.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the system is not the same at West Point as at Annapolis.

Mr. TILLMAN. Wherein is the difference?

Mr. LODGE. The cadets at Annapolis are by law appointed by the Representatives and Senators; and it is so expressed in the bill just passed. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] tells me that it is a mere custom in the case of cadets at West Point. I was not aware of it before. He said that they are all appointed by the President, and it is a mere custom to have them nominated by Senators and Representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know. I have not examined the law on that point. I know, in regard to the Naval Academy, that some years ago a cadet from my State, who was appointed, did not stand the examination or something, and then the Secretary of the Navy took it upon himself to appoint without consulting the Representative in Congress, and Congress at its next session passed an act prohibiting that and expressly requiring the appointment to be made——

Mr. LODGE. There is no question whatever about the law in regard to Annapolis. The law to which the Senator from South Carolina refers was passed to cure that precise thing.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does it not apply to West Point?

Mr. LODGE. I understand from the Senator from Vermont that it does not apply to West Point.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, the amendment which both Senators have in mind was not to vary the form of appointment; but it was to require the Secretary, when he made the appointment, the Member having failed to make it, to make the appointment for the district from the district.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I remember the discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. In the case to which the Senator from South Carolina refers the vacancy occurred in South Carolina; it was not filled by the Member within the specified time, and the then Secretary of the Navy appointed a young man from Alabama.

Mr. LODGE. That was the old system, which was cured by that amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; but that amendment only required that the appointment should be made from the district for the district.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

My point is entirely different from that. We have one system as to Annapolis and apparently a different system as to West Point. I did not know it before.

Mr. PROCTOR. I fail to see any difference in the systems. The law requires appointments at West Point to be made from the districts, but nothing is said about their being made upon the recommendation of the Representative. They must be made from the districts, and so the appointments at large must be made from the State. The appointees must be residents thereof. But, as I understand the Senator from Texas, that is substantially the provision now in regard to cadets at Annapolis.

Mr. LODGE. No; the bill very distinctly says:

There shall be allowed at the Naval Academy two midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

It does not say anything about districts. It is for the individuals holding those offices. It is so stated in the bill we have just passed. That is why I made the point on this Porto Rican matter, supposing that West Point appointments were made in the same way. I did not know that it was a matter of mere courtesy; that if I recommend a cadet at West Point, under the law it was mere courtesy that the appointment was made. I supposed each Senator and Representative had the right to do it.

Mr. BAILEY. As a matter of fact, that is the law, and I believe that is the law as to naval appointments.

Mr. LODGE. What I read is the law as to the Navy.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator or Representative nominates, and the President appoints.

Mr. LODGE. The President commissions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators are not addressing the Chair. The Chair does not know who has the floor. The Senator from South Carolina was the last Senator recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina yielded to the Senator from Texas, I understood.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not, but I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts seemed to be occupying the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, I share with the Senator from Massachusetts the objection to leaving these appointments as they stand, and when the bill giving the Senator the appointment of a cadet at the Annapolis Naval Academy first came here, I insisted that it should be so amended as to confer the power of appointment upon the Senator. The answer was that from time immemorial the practice had been that the Representatives, who alone had this power of appointment for many years, made the nominations, and upon those nominations the President acted and had never been known to refuse the appointment to the nominee of the Member.

Now, here is the difficulty which the House ought to cure in the matter to which the Senator from South Carolina refers. It was not a change as to the power of appointment, but was intended merely to deprive the Secretary of the Navy, when he had the power to appoint, from appointing a young man from one district to represent at the Academy another district. I believe that as the law then stood the power to appoint for the district was limited to an appointment from the district as certainly in the case of the Secretary as it was in the case of the Member.

I believe that while we are about this matter, the sensible way to do is by law to lodge the appointment where, by practice it has been exercised, and then in case of a disagreement between any Senator and the President, there will be no question about it. I think possibly when it comes to appointing an officer, then the President alone could have the power of commissioning, but an appointment to the Academy not being in the nature of an office, no doubt by law the designation of the cadets could be vested in the Senator or Representative; and it ought to be done.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me for one moment? I desire to read the general law. In regard to Annapolis there is no doubt whatever. The law is:

The nomination of a candidate to fill said vacancy shall be made upon the recommendation of the Member or Delegate.

There is nothing about the President at all. The vacancy is to be filled on the recommendation of a member of Congress. That is the old law as to the Naval Academy, and it is the law to-day, with such extension as we have given it. Now, in regard to West Point, it is apparently a mere custom; there is no law.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will read the law about West Point. I have sent for the act:

That the Corps of Cadets shall consist of 1 from each Congressional district, 1 from each Territory, 1 from the District of Columbia, 2 from each State at large, and 30 from the United States at large. They shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the 30 cadets appointed at large, be actual residents of the Congressional or Territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

There is nothing there in regard to the recommendation of Senators and Members, but the other Academy being so filled by law, I do not presume any President will ever undertake to ignore the recommendation of a Representative or a Senator, and if he does Congress will very soon change the law to protect itself.

The bill we have under consideration, providing for a cadet from Porto Rico, I believe has been amended, or an amendment is pending, giving the power to the President to appoint, without saying upon the recommendation of the governor or anybody. Is that the situation, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have an objection to that, because if we are going to give Porto Rico one cadet we ought to specify it and prevent any President from abusing it, and we should make it apply to citizens or residents of or people born in Porto Rico. With the language as it is now, any boy, who might go there temporarily, or be sent there for the purpose, could be appointed from Porto Rico.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will.

Mr. FORAKER. I rose for the purpose of making such an amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will prepare and send to the desk the words he wants to have inserted, in order to hedge it about and let it apply solely to Porto Ricans.

Mr. LODGE. That is what the naval provision does.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does, and I would be glad if we could get such a provision in here, and I do not see why we can not.

Mr. WARREN. If this language is left exactly as it came from the committee, it will provide for just that and nothing more. It needs neither addition nor subtraction from it. It states:

Provided, That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law there shall be one from Porto Rico.

If this proposed law and the old law are taken together, he would have to appoint a boy from Porto Rico.

Mr. TILLMAN. It does not apply specifically to Porto Rico, and some man from the United States might send his son down there, or he might be there as an officeholder temporarily, and the boy would get the appointment to West Point because he came from Porto Rico, yet he would not be a Porto Rican.

Mr. WARREN. A Scotchman or an Irishman might go to Massachusetts or South Carolina and become a resident.

Mr. TILLMAN. But if you mean to give it to Porto Rico let us say so.

Mr. WARREN. It does say so.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not believe it. Of course I am not disputing the Senator's word or implying that he is not honest in his belief. I am merely saying that this language is too broad, and we ought to hedge it about with such limitations as are found in other provisions of law in regard to appointments from the States and Territories.

Mr. FORAKER. I offer an amendment, to be inserted before the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is to insert the words "who shall be a native of said island;" so that the amendment offered by the committee as amended will read as follows:

Provided, That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law there shall be one from Porto Rico, who shall be a native of said island, to be appointed by the President.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Ohio whether he is not going a little too far, considering our policy, which permits changes of residence and emigration. Suppose he should say, "who has been a resident of the island at least ten years," or some other considerable term of time.

Mr. FORAKER. I think this whole matter was started with me. Being chairman of the committee having Porto Rico in charge, I offered amendments both to the naval bill and the Military Academy bill, making provisions of this character. My desire was that the natives of the island should have this opportunity, and that it should be for their benefit. I think it ought to be so provided, particularly at this time. It may be that later, when conditions may have changed, it will be well enough to make a provision such as the Senator has just suggested, but it seems to me that if anyone, without limitation, can be appointed from Porto Rico, it is quite probable, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] suggests, that people who have gone there from the United States might aspire to it. I want the people of the island to feel that they have the privilege enjoyed by the people of all the States and Territories, and I hope the amendment which I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if this amendment providing that the appointee shall be a native of the island is not put on, the Senator from Wyoming does not think under existing law he would be required to be a native of the island?

Mr. WARREN. He would be required to be a resident.

Mr. LODGE. Ah, that is a very different thing. It is an easy thing to become a resident; but as I understand the purpose of this amendment, it is like the purpose achieved with respect to the Naval Academy. The purpose is to give one appointment at each of the Academies to a native of the island of Porto Rico. The amendment as it stands in the Military Academy bill certainly does not do that.

Mr. WARREN. It provides that he shall be a resident.

Mr. LODGE. A resident; precisely. That does not seem to me enough.

Mr. WARREN. If it is desired to provide for the appointment of a man born in Porto Rico, it had better be so stated, perhaps, in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio has offered an amendment, and it is now pending. It will be stated.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow the amendment to be stated?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add after "Porto Rico," in line 7, the words "who shall be a native of said island;" so that the amendment, if amended, will read as follows:

Provided, That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law, there shall be one from Porto Rico, who shall be a native of said island, to be appointed by the President.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I always differ very reluctantly and with great lack of confidence with the distinguished Senator from Ohio, but I venture to say that this is going very much too far, because I am sure no Senator here would be willing to provide that the appointees from a State must necessarily be natives of that State. In other words, a young man born in the State of Ohio removing to the State of Texas is eligible under the present law, but applying this amendment to the States he would not be eligible under it.

While I entirely sympathize with the purpose of having this appointment bestowed upon some young man who is in good faith a resident of Porto Rico and not a mere carpetbagger who has gone there for some purpose of this kind, I hesitate to enter upon a policy of restricting privileges to the birthplace of anybody under the American Government.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. We have just taken this step in the naval appropriation bill passed a few moments ago. It contains precisely this language, restricting it to native citizens of the island. I will state my idea about it, if the Senator will indulge me a moment.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. We can get plenty of Americans from the States and Territories. I want to make sure that a Porto Rican has an opportunity to enjoy the privileges of the Military and Naval Academies, and I do not see how it can work any injustice to anybody. We can change it at any time, if we like.

I know there are a good many young men down there who are not natives. I do not know whether the President, in the exercise of his discretion, if he were not restricted, would select one of them or not, but I want to make sure that he does not. I should like to have him give the Porto Rican a chance.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Texas that the case of the Porto Ricans is entirely different from those living in the States of the Union. I think we ought to recognize that difference and we ought to positively declare by law that the appointee shall be a native of Porto Rico. I believe the difference between the situation in Porto Rico and the States of the Union is such that we ought to make that distinction. I think we ought to make it clear to those people by law that none but Porto Ricans are to have this privilege.

Mr. BAILEY. I stated that I thoroughly sympathize with the object of the amendment, and I am not going to carry my opposition further than the mere statement of my objection to ingrafting upon any enactment by Congress a distinction based upon the birthplace of a man, I will not say an American citizen, because I regret to say that the unhappy condition of those people is now that they are neither aliens nor American citizens.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question, that I may understand his point?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator's point is that he wants to stand up for the rights of carpetbaggers?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no. The Senator from Massachusetts might have so understood it, and I would not venture to contradict his statement that he did understand it so; but nothing I said could be fairly construed into that, because I have an unhappy recollection of the carpetbaggers. I have no disposition to stand up for them any place on the globe. I do know, furthermore, that when the carpetbaggers go to a country that is not permitted to govern itself they generally govern it, and always wrong; and I do know that if there is any appointment in the Porto Rican government upon which these people can lay hands, peaceful or violent, they are certain to do it. There is a good deal of wisdom in the effort to remove it beyond their possible reach.

But I simply utter again, and for the last time, a protest against legislation that confines the privilege granted to people under the jurisdiction of the American Government who are natives of a particular place.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BAILEY. I do, sir.

Mr. WARREN. I desire the attention of the Senator from Ohio who offers the amendment. I assume that in his position as chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico he can state readily what constitutes residence in Porto Rico.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Ohio makes it nativity and not residence by his amendment.

Mr. WARREN. But I want to see what the difference is.

Mr. FORAKER. Residence in Porto Rico is the same as residence in any other place. As to citizenship in Porto Rico, I have forgotten now just what the provision of the statute is, but all the natives are citizens of Porto Rico, and others going there to make that their permanent place of abode will become citizens according to the local laws.

Mr. LODGE. After a fixed period.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know just what those local laws provide.

Mr. LODGE. It is about a year's residence.

Mr. FORAKER. My amendment provides that they shall be native citizens.

Mr. WARREN. The reason why I asked was to see what the real difference is. If, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, the matter of residence or citizenship requires but a year, and the Senator from Ohio desires to have a native Porto Rican, the committee will accept the amendment which he offers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts accept the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. I do..

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word.

I am very glad that the amendment which was suggested, giving the power to a delegate from Porto Rico to recommend and practically appoint a cadet, has been eliminated. I have objected to a Delegate in Congress from Porto Rico because I regard that as practically a pledge of statehood, and I am not willing, as now advised, and I think I shall never be willing for one, to agree to the proposition that there shall be admitted into the Union territory or people who are remote from it and not a part of the mainland of this country. That is a question, however, which will be discussed if we ever reach it, and I have been unwilling that there should be put in our law any provision from which there could be drawn an inference of such a promise.

I have had some doubt myself whether it was exactly competent for Congress to authorize the President to appoint, on the recommendation of a designated person, an official. Whatever appointment the President has the power to make I think he should be permitted to make, as a rule. To say that he may make it upon my recommendation means that I may make it, and the President is simply to visé or O. K., if I may use that expression, my designation; but that is aside, as the matter has been amended.

Now, I have no particular objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, although I think it is unnecessary. It could be offered only in pursuance of the policy, which is perhaps a wise one, to bring into relations with our Army and Navy natives of Porto Rico. We must trust Presidents; it is a coordinate and independent branch of the Government; and where the Congress clearly indicates a policy as to an appointment which is provided for by law, I think we may very well trust the President to carry it out. To appoint an American, the son of some official who has been a year or two in Porto Rico, under this provision, would be an obvious fraud upon the law and an obvious perversion of the policy which underlies the law.

There shall be one from Porto Rico.

That does not mean, I venture, a young man, the son of some governor or secretary of state, a temporary official, who for a year, perhaps, has resided there with his father and his father's family. It means, just as the Senator from Ohio intended it should mean, more than that. It goes deeper than that. It is not a mere matter of residence. It is a proposition by Congress that there shall be represented at West Point the island of Porto Rico. It is to bring into relations—it is to give the benefit of a military education to a native of Porto Rico. I believe it is perfectly safe to leave that with the provision as it was reported by the committee:

That in addition to the corps of cadets now authorized by law there shall be one from Porto Rico.

If our purpose was to enable the President to appoint another American, we could simply enlarge the number the President might appoint, without any Territorial designation whatever. When we go beyond that and provide who shall be appointed by the President, and that there shall be one from the island of Porto Rico, I would have thought (though I do not care particularly about that) that any President would take it as an indication of the policy of Congress, which provides for this appointment, that there should come one from the people of Porto Rico, not the son of some American official who happens for the time being, removable at any day, to be in Porto Rico.

I shall not object to the amendment, but I submit to Senators that the statement as to the policy, and the obvious policy involved, which is a provision of the amendment reported by the committee, it would be perfectly safe to leave it to the President, without notifying him that we think he might abuse it, and that we legislate to prevent its abuse.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin is probably correct in what he supposed would occur if it should not be amended, namely, that the President, in making the selection under this provision, would seek to select a native citizen of Porto Rico. Yet the Senator has observed that there is very great diversity of opinion, in this Chamber certainly, as to whether or not, even morally, he would be so bound. The provision is without any restriction in that regard, and we know that not only will there be a class of officials who would be temporarily residing in Porto Rico, but a great many Americans have gone there and made homes there. They have engaged in business there and they will have sons, it is to be supposed, who might after a while become citizens of Porto Rico, and helping to sustain the government of that island, contributing their share to its support, they might very well become applicants for this kind of recognition.

As I said, I want to so hedge it about as to make sure that the native citizen of the island will get the benefit of the provision. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this provision did not at any time say that the President should make the appointment on any other official's designation. It is perfectly free from that objection, if that be an objection. I would feel better satisfied to have the provision adopted with the amendment which has been offered.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment of the Senator from Ohio will not be adopted. We ought not to go into this class legislation. This is nothing in the world but class legislation. We all know that there are thousands of Spaniards born in Spain who are citizens of Porto Rico. We call them so technically in our laws. We all know that they are there citizens of Porto Rico and not of the United States. Why cut them out? Why legislate for a class?

It is nothing in the world but class legislation. To say that a man to be eligible shall be born in Porto Rico is to tell all the Spaniards there that they have not equal rights with those who were born there, and we ought not to do it. Class legislation is abominable to the American people generally, in whatever shape it may come up.

Mr. FORAKER. I am now more than ever anxious that the amendment should be adopted as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the regular order may be temporarily laid aside until we finish the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. DEPEW. I have a very short bill here of four lines, recommended by the Treasury Department. I ask that it be immediately considered.

Mr. WARREN. I am very sorry to disoblige the Senator, but I will not be able to yield to the passage of bills until we close the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs, was under the subhead "Pay of civilians," on page 11, line 3, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one librarian from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for civilians employed at the Military Academy from $38,130 to $38,630.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," on page 21, line 12, to increase the appropriation for cleaning public buildings (not quarters) from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after the word "library," at the end of line 6, to strike out "from twenty-four;" in line 7, after the word "purchase," to strike out "about forty-five;" in line 8, before the word "holders," to strike out "with patent;" in the same line, after the word "holders," to strike out "to protect the parts from storm and rain when playing outside;" in line 9, after the word "and," to strike out "to supply;" in line 10, before the word "instruments," to strike out "the very largest brass;" and in line 11, before the word "eight," to strike out "best make, silver plated, to increase the volume of tone at parade duties;" so as to make the clause read:

To increase the present repertoire of the band library to 40 parts; to purchase music folios, holders, and a set of instruments, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. On page 23, line 17, there is a misprint, which I ask to have corrected. The provision reads:

For one dozen rattan laundry baskets, to be expended without advertising, nine-six dollars.

I ask that that be changed so as to read "$96."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made, in the absence of objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 19, to strike out:

For purchase of one boiler for the cadet laundry, to be added to the appropriation of $1,498 in the act approved June 28, 1902, "For replacing, by exchange, one old boiler in the cadet laundry by one 125-horsepower Fitzgibbon boiler, delivered and installed," which is hereby made available for part payment of the purchase of the boiler called for in this estimate, the total appropriation to be immediately available and to be expended without advertising, $219.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 5, to insert:

For an amount in addition to that provided by existing law for the purchase of one boiler for the cadet laundry, to be expended without advertising and to be immediately available, $219.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 20, to insert:

For the replacing of crockery, glassware, cutlery, etc., in the cadet mess, to be immediately available and to be expended without advertising, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 23, to insert:

For the replacing of worn-out tablecloths, napkins, dish towels, etc., in the cadet mess, to be immediately available and to be expended without advertising, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for miscellaneous items and incidental expenses from $33,190 to $35,265.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Buildings and grounds," on page 27, line 19, before the word "hospital," to strike out "parts of;" and in the same line, after the word "hospital," to strike out "not yet wired;" so as to make the clause read:

For wiring hospital for electric lighting and for placing therein electric fans, electric heaters, electric-light fixtures, etc., with necessary attachments therefor, $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For constructing a wagon road from the railroad station to the south end of post, $20,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 3, to insert:

For gas and electric-light fixtures for new building for officers' mess and quarters, to be immediately available, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 6, to insert:

For relaying terrace platform of memorial hall, in addition to the amount already appropriated for this purpose, to be immediately available and the total amount to be available until expended, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, to increase the total appropriation for buildings and grounds from $83,657 to $91,157.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

That section 5 of the act entitled, "An act to increase the efficiency of the Army," approved February 14, 1903, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the Chief of Artillery shall hereafter serve as an additional member of the general staff, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general, and when the next vacancy occurs in the office of colonel of artillery, it shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of colonels of artillery shall not exceed 13; and the provisions of the foregoing sections of this act shall take effect on August 15, 1903."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the papers which I send to the desk may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

The act of April 22 or 26, 1898, prescribed that the Army should be organganized into brigades in time of war—three regiments to a brigade.

The act of February 2, 1901, authorized 30 regiments of infantry and 15 regiments of cavalry, besides the artillery; in other words, 45 regiments, for which 15 brigadier-generals were asked. This is what established the number.

The militia act requires the militia of the several States to be organized similarly to the Regular Army, and one of the first questions asked by the militia authorities was whether they would be required to abandon their brigade organizations. It is not intended that the militia organizations of brigades and divisions shall be disturbed, and in order that the law may be complied with it is the intention of the War Department to direct the regiments of the Regular Army to be announced in brigade organizations.

The number of 15 brigadier-generals was adopted after mature consideration and not as a mere abstract matter. The number of colonels of artillery was fixed at 13, and the ratio of officers of all other grades in that arm are based on 13. The additional colonel, the fourteenth, being added for detail as chief of artillery as an extra colonel.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 25, 1903.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to call your attention to the operation of the provision which was added to the general staff bill in conference relating to the reduction in the number of brigadier-generals consequent upon giving that rank to the Chief of Artillery. The act of February 2, 1901, provided for an extra colonel of artillery in order that one of the colonels might serve as chief of the corps. The provision referred to reduces the number of brigadier-generals, which had been fixed at fifteen with reference to the requirement of the enlarged Army for general officers, but leaves the extra artillery colonel which had been fixed with reference to having a colonel of artillery act as Chief of Artillery. It seems to me that the provision ought to have cut off the fourteenth colonel instead of cutting off one of the brigadier-generals. We are proposing to make brigade organizations of the Army, and it is very important to have brigadier-generals.

The number was fixed after very thorough consideration, and the increase in rank of the Chief of Artillery makes no change whatever in his duties, or in the requirements for brigadier-generals of the line, while it does give us a superfluous colonel of artillery. There are 45 regiments of infantry and cavalry, and the law provides that three regiments shall constitute a brigade, so that we have now only the exact number of brigadier-generals necessary to command brigades, to say nothing of the details which it will be necessary for us to make from the list of brigadier-generals to special service in the general staff and otherwise.

I suggest that in some one of the bills now pending a clause be introduced which changes the reduction of the number of brigadier-generals to a reduction of the number of colonels of artillery. The difference in cost will be but trifling, and it means getting rid of a superfluous officer instead of getting rid of an officer who is very much needed.

Faithfully, yours,
ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. DIETRICH], on the 13th instant, in which are included various tables and statistics relating to expenditures, etc., in the Philippine Islands, may be printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

PRIVATE CORPORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. NELSON. I now call up for consideration the conference report which I made yesterday on the bill (S. 6139) to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska. The report is printed in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings, and it has also been printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report was printed in the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOAR. I now call up for consideration the conference report which I presented yesterday on the bill (S. 3653) for the protection of the President of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the consideration of the report named by him, which was read in full to the Senate yesterday.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; it was read yesterday.

Mr. President, all I wish to say at this time is that this bill was very thoroughly discussed in all its details; that it passed the Senate by a large majority; and that there have been some changes made in it in conference, all of them, I think—unless it be some very minor matter which does not occur to me now—yielding very considerably to the objections of the minority. Under such circumstances it never has been the practice of the Senate when the body in a constitutional way has expressed its mind after full debate to renew the debate. I do not, therefore, propose to renew it; and I hope we shall have a vote upon the adoption of the conference report.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 17, known as the Littlefield antitrust bill, as amended by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to inform the Senator from Kentucky that if he will allow the pending matter to be disposed of, I should like myself to make the motion which he has made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I shall be delighted to have the Senator from Massachusetts make that motion.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. If I may be permitted to say——

Mr. ALDRICH. I rise to a point of order, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. Am I not to be allowed to make a suggestion to the Senator who makes this motion?

Mr. ALDRICH. It strikes me that it is establishing a bad precedent to discuss these various bills upon a question which is not debatable.

Mr. HOAR. I do not propose to discuss the bill. I desire to make, if the Senator will listen to me—and perhaps he will be courteous enough to me to do that——

Mr. ALDRICH. I suppose I shall have to waive the rules of the Senate for the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator from Rhode Island might withdraw his point of order while I state that being in charge of the antitrust bill, which is one reported to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee by a large majority and committed to my charge as chairman of the committee, it is my purpose to call it up at the first practicable opportunity; but a conference report at any time takes it right off its feet, as the Senator from Kentucky knows very well.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will delay presenting his motion until the conference report is disposed of, I will consent——

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall have to insist on my point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] makes the point of order that debate on a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill is not in order; and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BERRY. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17) requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a point of order that that motion is not in order pending a conference report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I be heard, Mr. President, on the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule that the motion is in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then, Mr. President, I have nothing to say.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to say, before the vote is taken upon this motion, that I am somewhat embarrassed as to my vote, but I have concluded to vote. Under the rule of the Senate a Senator who is personally interested in a question has the right to be excused from voting. If this were a vote directly upon the bill, and not merely as to the order of business, I should ask to be excused, for the reason that I own stock in corporations, which I suppose will be treated as trusts under the legislation proposed. But as the question is one simply of the order of business, and as I do not believe the business of the Senate is going to be facilitated by the consideration of the bill referred to, I will take the liberty to vote upon the preliminary question, though if the bill comes up I shall ask to be excused from voting upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has called for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I do not know whether he has voted; but as I do not see him in the Chamber, I will withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK], and, with his consent, I will transfer my pair, so that the Senator from West Virginia will stand paired with the Senator from Montana, which will leave the Senator from Indiana and myself at liberty to vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is agreeable to me, and I vote "nay."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that we exchange pairs, so that the Senator from Virginia will stand paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and we may both vote. If that is agreeable, I will make the transfer and vote. I vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS. That is agreeable to me. I vote "yea."

Mr. KEARNS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay," I presume, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. MONEY], who is unavoidably absent on account of sickness, is paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY. I have been requested to state that the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is confined at home on account of sickness, and that he is paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. If present, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri has just announced the pair.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I reannounce it, as the Senator from Missouri has left the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—28.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter now before the Senate is the conference report submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me in order that I may withdraw a motion which I made.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I made a motion yesterday to reconsider the vote by which the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was adopted. I wish to state now that I will withdraw my motion for a reconsideration. I desire to say, however, that there is that in the bill which conscientiously I can not vote for; but feeling that the opposition which would arise if the report were reconsidered would absolutely destroy the bill, so that it could not pass at this session, and under great pressure from other members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I withdraw my motion for a reconsideration of the vote by which the conference report was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota withdraws his motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill was adopted.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

TARIFF IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

To the Senate:

I have just received a cable from Governor Taft which runs as follows:

"Necessity for passage House tariff bill most urgent. The conditions of productive industry and business considerably worse than in November, the date of last report, and growing worse each month. Some revival in sugar, tobacco prices due to expectation of tariff law. The interests of Filipinos in sugar and tobacco extensive, and failure of bill will be blow in face of those interests. Number of tobacco factories will have to close, and many sugar haciendas will be put up for sale at a sacrifice, if the bill will not pass. Customs receipts have fallen off this month one-third, showing decrease of purchasing power of islands. General business stagnant. All political parties, including labor unions, most strenuous in petition for tariff bill. Effect of its failure very discouraging."

Vice-Governor Luke Wright indorses in the strongest manner all that Governor Taft has said, and states that he has the gravest apprehension as to the damage that may come to the islands if there is not a substantial reduction in the tariff levied against Philippine goods coming into the United States. I very earnestly ask that this matter receive the immediate attention of Congress and that the relief prayed for be granted.

As Congress knows, a series of calamities have befallen the Philippine people. Just as they were emerging from nearly six years of devastating warfare, with the accompanying destruction of property and the breaking up of the bonds of social order and the habits of peaceful industry, there occurred an epidemic of rinderpest, which destroyed 90 per cent of the carabaos, the Filipino cattle, leaving the people without draft animals to till the land or to aid in the ordinary work of farm and village life. The extent of the disaster can be seen from the fact that the surviving carabaos have increased over tenfold in value. At the same time a peculiar oriental horse disease became epidemic, further crippling transportation. The rice crop, already reduced by various causes to but a fourth of its ordinary size, has been damaged by locusts, so that the price of rice has nearly doubled.

Under these circumstances there is imminent danger of famine in the islands. Congress is in course of generously appropriating $3,000,000 to meet the immediate needs; but the indispensable and preeminent need is the resurrection of productive industry from the prostration into which it has been thrown by the causes above enumerated. I ask action in the tariff matter, not merely from the standpoint of wise governmental policy, but as a measure of humanity in response to an appeal to which this great people should not close its ears. We have assumed responsibilities toward the Philippine Islands which we are in honor bound to fulfill. We have the specific duty of taking every measure in our power to see to their prosperity. The first and most important step in this direction has been accomplished by the joint action of the military and civil authorities in securing peace and civil government. The wisdom of Congress at the present session has provided for them a stable currency, and its spirit of humane liberality and justice toward them will be shown in the appropriation now substantially agreed upon of $3,000,000 to meet the pressing, immediate necessities; but there remains a vital need that one thing further shall be done. The calamities which have befallen them as above enumerated could have been averted by no human wisdom. They can not be completely repaired; but the suffering can be greatly alleviated and a permanent basis of future prosperity assured if the economic relations of the islands with the United States are put upon a satisfactory basis.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 27, 1903.

JOHN WESLEY.

Mr. BACON. I introduce a joint resolution which I would like to have read in full, and then I will ask that it may be considered at the present time.

The joint resolution (S. R. 169) providing for the placing of bronze tablets on the custom-house and post-office building in Savannah, Ga., was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to permit to be placed on the United States custom-house at Savannah, Ga., a bronze tablet commemorative of the fact that in a public building then on said site, which had been erected by Oglethorpe, John Wesley preached his first sermon in America, March 7, 1736.

The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to permit to be placed on the United States post-office building in Savannah, Ga., a bronze tablet commemorative of the fact that in a public building then on said site, which had been erected by Oglethorpe, John Wesley preached periodically from May 9, 1736, to November 27, 1737.

The tablet shall in each instance be affixed to the building at such place and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct, and shall be of such size and shape and shall contain such inscription as shall be approved by him, the same to be done without any expense to the Government.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I beg to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that unless the joint resolution is acted upon immediately it will be of no avail. The purpose is to commemorate the fact that John Wesley preached his first sermon in Savannah, in 1736, in a building which had been erected by James Oglethorpe, upon the site now occupied by the United States custom-house, and the further fact that he preached some eighteen months in another building, also erected by Oglethorpe, upon the site now occupied by the Federal court building.

I will simply add that the necessity for the joint resolution grows out of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury, after due consideration, has determined that he has not the authority to permit these tablets to be affixed to those buildings. The facts thus sought to be commemorated are of great historic interest, and I trust that the joint resolution may be immediately passed, in order that it may be at once transmitted to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPORTATION OF BREEDING ANIMALS.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16656) regulating the importation of breeding animals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been read on a previous day. If there be no objection, it will not be read again. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPOONER. There is an amendment.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, at the end of line 17, page 2, to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to all such animals as have been imported and are in quarantine, or otherwise in the custody of custom or other officers of the United States at the date of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "imported," in line 9, on the first page, the words "by a citizen of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to say one word before the bill passes. When it came up some days ago, as I had received several letters opposing the bill just before it was called up, I objected to its consideration at that time. I desire to have it understood that I do not object to it since I have looked into it further, and that I favor the passage of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16573) to authorize the construction of a bridge across St. Francis River at or near the town of St. Francis, Ark.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH SIOUX INDIANS OF ROSEBUD RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7390) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 5, page 9, line 18, after the word "act," to insert "and amended agreement;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That this act and amended agreement shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by the Rosebud Indians, in manner and form prescribed by the sixth article of the agreement herein as amended, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation by the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the same has been obtained in the manner and form required by said sixth article of said agreement, which proof shall be presented to him within two years from the passage of this act, and upon failure of such proof and proclamation this act becomes of no effect and null and void.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36 or the equivalent in each township, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein; or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received, as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask the Senator who has charge of this bill—I could not hear the reading in the confusion which existed—if the treaty did not provide that these lands should be open to free homestead settlement?

Mr. GAMBLE. No, sir. The original bill, which was passed at the last session of Congress, provided free homes. This bill is changed in that particular and provides for the settlers paying $2.50 an acre.

Mr. DUBOIS. I trust, Mr. President, that that provision will not be passed. I think the free-home provision ought to stay in the bill. I hope the Senate will not pass any bill buying Indian reservations and charging settlers for the land. I see no reason why Congress should do that.

A free-homes bill was passed a few years ago, relieving all those who had gone on Indian reservations and taken up lands from paying the money which they had agreed to pay when they went on those lands. We had an illustration in my own State of the opening of an Indian reservation and charging $3.75 an acre for the land. It was the best land in the State. Settlers went on there, taking the lands with the understanding that they were to pay $3.75 an acre for them. The proposition confronted us to pass a free-homes bill to be applied to all reservations, to lands which had been opened previous to the passage of that bill. The bill was passed a year or two ago. I had the honor of being chairman of the Public Lands Committee of this body when that proposition was urged, and I opposed it unless it were made to apply to all future purchases of Indian reservations. So long as I had the honor of being the chairman of that committee the free-homes bill was not passed. Finally the bill went to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think came out from that committee.

The argument made then is good now, and is always good. The men who go out there representing the Government to make treaties with the Indians are besieged by the people living around the reservation to make a treaty, no matter how much they have to pay for the lands. All the white people urge that to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. There is nothing pending before the Senate unless the Senator objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator from South Dakota not accept an amendment providing for free homes, as was provided for in the original bill?

Mr. GAMBLE. At the last session of Congress this bill was passed with the free-homes provision, which was insisted upon here. It has met with serious objection in the other House, and can not be carried through there. The bill has been amended to meet those objections; and we prefer to have the bill passed in its present form. Should the bill go to the other House containing the free-homes amendment, it would meet the fate of the bill passed last year. We are very anxious to have this bill in its present form. The delegation of the State of South Dakota is satisfied with it under existing conditions, and I trust no objection will be interposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I have been maintaining my present position for several years, and it is a correct position. I think now, while I myself am besieged by my own people to have the price of land reduced from that provided for in the treaty stipulation when it was passed a couple of years ago, and approved by all our Senators and Representatives, still they afterwards come here asking Congress to take away from them the direction to pay for those lands at the stipulated price, and they ask to be relieved from paying what they agreed to pay when the act was passed through Congress, I do not feel as though I could give my consent that the bill be amended in this way.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16990) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. MCRAE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

COURTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16775) establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in line 5, after the name "Duncan," to insert the word "and;" after the word "and" to strike out "Maryetta" and insert "Marietta;" in line 6, after the name "Marietta," to strike out "and Comanche; and the court held at Ryan, in said Territory, is hereby discontinued and the records thereof transferred to the town of Comanche;" in line 11, after the name "Duncan," to strike out "Maryetta" and insert "and Marietta," and in the same line, after the name "Marietta," to strike out "and Comanche;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the southern judicial district of Indian Territory courts shall be held in the towns of Duncan and Marietta, and all laws regulating the holding of courts in the Indian Territory shall be applicable to the said courts hereby created in the said towns of Duncan and Marietta, respectively.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. BERRY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. That in addition to the places now provided by law for holding courts in the western judicial district of Indian Territory, courts shall be held Wetumpka, Creek Nation; and all laws regulating the holding of courts in Indian Territory shall be applicable to the courts at said places.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill establishing United States courts at Duncan and Marietta, Ind. T., and for other purposes."

GOVERNMENT OF GUAM.

Mr. FORAKER. Some days ago the bill (S. 6599) to provide a government for the island of Guam, and for other purposes, and also Senate bill 7054, providing similarly for the island of Tutuila, were considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and reported to the Senate with the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. At that point the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] asked to offer an amendment. The bill then went over. I desire now that those two bills may be considered. I first ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 6599.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6599) to provide a government for the island of Guam, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now in the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendments heretofore made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment, to be known as section 6 of the bill, that which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. Unless Congress shall otherwise direct, this act shall not continue in force and effect beyond the 3d day of March, 1905.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept that amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. SIMON] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to inquire what is the object of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BACON. I will state to the Senator very frankly. The bill is one which imposes upon the President the duty and gives him the power of unlimited legislation and all the powers of government similar to the amendment the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] offered to the bill which was passed in reference to the Philippine Islands.

I recognize the fact, as stated by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], that these are very small pieces of territory and that it is impossible at this time, or at any time perhaps, to frame a civil government for them which will be satisfactory, or which will be justified by the number of people there. At the same time I dislike to see upon the statute books an indefinite and unlimited power of the Executive to perform all the three functions of government. Therefore, I simply propose that there shall be upon this bill the same limitation which the Senator will remember was upon the original Louisiana resolution.

It will be in the power of Congress to continue the government set up there if it be one that shall be approved by Congress after examination; and it struck me as being an entirely conservative amendment and, at the same time, one that will not in any manner interfere with the proper government of the islands.

Mr. FORAKER. I have accepted the amendment because we shall have all the next Congress in which to determine, after we see how the law works, whether or not we want it changed or continued.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator provided for a report to Congress?

Mr. FORAKER. I have not. I simply say that the government shall be conducted in such a way as the President shall direct.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask a question in that connection. I ask why it is that these insular possessions of ours, as they are called, are now continued under the War Department?

Mr. FORAKER. They have been continued under the Navy Department, if the Senator will allow me to correct him.

Mr. HOAR. Guam is under the Navy Department, I know——

Mr. FORAKER. So is Tutuila.

Mr. HOAR. But the Philippine Islands are under the Department of War.

Mr. FORAKER. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, can better answer that question than can I.

Mr. HOAR. I understand; but I should like to know, if any Senator can inform me, why the Philippine Islands, which are claimed to be under a civil government and in the establishment of which there has been enacted very largely Magna Charta and the Constitution, are still kept under the War Department?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, the Senator who is chairman of the Committee on the Philippines can answer as to that better than I can.

As to the two islands of Tutuila and Guam, they are both under the Navy Department; and they are there because Congress has never legislated with respect to them; and we are embarrassed all the time because there has been no act of Congress relating to them.

Mr. HOAR. Why are they kept under the Navy Department? Why is it that we are legislating over a community of about nine or ten thousand people, as I understand?

Mr. FORAKER. There are about 9,000 people in Guam.

Mr. HOAR. Why is it that such a people is kept under a belligerent department of the Government?

Mr. FORAKER. They have been kept under that Department simply because Congress has chosen to take no action. I have been trying ever since I have had any right to initiate legislation for those islands to get Congress to legislate. Now I am about to get some legislation, the best, I think, that can be provided under the circumstances, and I think it of the highest importance that we provide this legislation now.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has offered an amendment, which I have accepted, providing that this legislation shall not continue in force and effect beyond the 4th of March, 1905, which will give us all of the next Congress in which to consider what better form of government, if any, we can provide, and I think the Senator from Masssachusetts will appreciate the importance of our having some kind of legislative action.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not rise at this time to make criticisms on the Senator's plan of government. I realize the difficulty which his committee is under, and I realize the capacity of that committee to deal with such difficulty. I do not want to make small criticisms when there is no time to reconstruct our policy, but I want to take occasion to say what I have thought and intended to say for some time—that if anything could show the utter unfitness of this country, as we are constituted to transact business, to govern dependencies thousands and thousands of miles off, it is the fact that they have to wait for their legislation. Not only these 9,000 people in Guam, but the 9,000,000 people in the Philippine Islands, have to wait in the first place for such information as is filtered through the War Department and the Navy Department to Congress, and then, in time of peace, years after we have established our claim to rule over them, they are kept under the Departments of War and of the Navy, whose law is secrecy and arbitrary power—the rule of one man.

A very interesting instance of that thing has come up during the present session. Mabini is one of the ablest men of this generation. Nobody will question that. He was the author of Aguinaldo's constitution, which was an admirable constitution. He is the author of many great state papers; he is the author of the reply to President McKinley; and when he replied to President McKinley, President McKinley was answered by a foeman worthy of his intellectual steel. That man was a paralytic; his lower limbs had withered; his flesh had shrunk away until he weighed no more than 90 pounds; and he was kept in prison in Guam because he would not take the oath of allegiance to the United States in Guam. He said that other men had been allowed to take the oath in the Philippine Islands, and that he did not know, and could not know until he went to his home, what the condition of things was in the Philippine Islands, and that as the grave was just opening for him he would not make the last important act of his life an act of dishonor.

If you had read that in Plutarch, you would have thought that it was one of the great heroes of antiquity who had assumed that attitude; if you had read of it in our Revolutionary times as an utterance of Ethan Allen or Sam Adams or Laurens it would have been one of the proudest facts in American history, and would have been the theme that would have stirred the blood and quickened the pulse of great gatherings anywhere on American soil. That man was kept, under those circumstances, a prisoner in the island of Guam. I offered a resolution of inquiry here as to why that man was kept a prisoner, and the answer came from the Executive that, of course, he was not a prisoner; that he had been at liberty to go anywhere on the face of the earth he wanted since about the middle of July, when an order to that effect had gone out; a copy of the order was sent in here; and yet such is the impossibility of a fitting rule of such possessions that it turned out that, although that order went on the 15th of July, it had not been obeyed up until the last few days in October. At least when General Miles, traveling there, stopped at Guam he found Mabini in prison under the charge of a company of marines, and a marine marching backward and forward before his door with a loaded musket.

Of course nobody questions the absolute good faith of the President; nobody questions the absolute good faith of the Secretary of War, who was the means of transmitting that order; but it is so impossible to govern men who are dependent, who are not heard themselves, and who have no votes and no rights, at a distance of thousands of miles off, that the foremost man in the Eastern Hemisphere at this moment in character, in intellect, and in fame was kept in prison—I will not say a dungeon—was kept in a prison several months after the order had gone out there to set him free.

That is the kind of rule we are going to have so long as we claim the right to govern and to tax men who have no votes and who have no representation, and to deal with men whose constitutional rights have got in the final resort to be determined by a court 8,000 miles away, and by a Congress who can not find time—while they are filibustering about this, that, or the other measure here—even to listen to their complaints, and a President who does not know for three months after he has given an order to release an illustrious patriot whether the order has been disobeyed or not.

Mr. SIMON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 7. That writs of error and appeals from the final decisions of the highest court of the said island of Guam shall be allowed and may be taken to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit in the same manner and under the same regulations and in the same cases as writs of error and appeals now taken from the supreme courts of the Territories of the United States; and such writs of error and appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit shall be allowed in all cases where the Constitution of the United States or a treaty thereof or an act of Congress is brought in question and the right claimed thereunder is denied, and in all other cases where writs of error and appeals are allowed from the supreme courts of the Territories of the United States.

Mr. BACON. What is the amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. It simply attaches the island of Guam to the ninth circuit, and provides that appeals may be taken to the United States circuit court of appeals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE ISLAND OF TUTUILA, ETC.

Mr. FORAKER. I now ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 7054) to provide a government for the island of Tutuila and the islands adjacent thereto within the jurisdiction of the United States. It will take only a moment. It is in the same state that the other bill was—in the Senate and open to amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BACON. I offer the same amendment which I submitted to the other bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. Unless Congress shall otherwise direct, this act shall not continue in force and effect beyond the 3d day of March, 1905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States. The bill has been read and certain amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to be heard briefly on the bill, not to any great extent.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire objects to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill has been in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and certain amendments reported by the committee were agreed to, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is correct. Section 3 was passed; that is the only section, I believe, which has not been considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator mean passed over?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It was passed over. I am instructed by the committee to amend the bill by striking out that section.

Mr. FORAKER. Is that section 3?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The entire section 3.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the educational qualification?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The educational test. There are some Senators who object to it, and the session is so far advanced that its consideration may endanger the passage of the bill, which contains many excellent provisions. The committee, therefore, has instructed me to move to amend the bill by striking out section 3.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, if there be no objection, will be regarded as concurred in in the Senate, and the Senator from Indiana now offers an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to inquire if there are any further committee amendments to be offered?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I have no other amendments to offer on behalf of the committee.

Mr. CLAY. I understood from the Senator from Indiana that the junior Senator from Massachusetts had agreed to an amendment that was to be offered by the committee, striking out that feature which provides that insane persons or persons who come to this country from foreign countries and become insane within two years after they arrive here shall be deported to the country whence they came. That was to be stricken out, I understood.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The committee did not, so far as I am aware, agree to the amendment, but the junior Senator from Massachusetts did. If the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect, I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. CLAY. I understood the chairman of the committee was to offer an amendment, and that it had been agreed upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Georgia direct attention to the amendment he proposes?

Mr. CLAY. I will as soon as I can get a copy of the bill. I thought the amendment had been drawn. I understood that the chairman of the committee was to offer it. It was agreed to. I will find it, I think, in one minute.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The chairman of the committee is necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. While the Senator from Georgia is finding that, I desire to inquire whether the amendment which I introduced and had referred to the committee, which I understood they had accepted unanimously, is in the bill? I refer to the amendment to the effect that if a person is found on the voyage to be afflicted with disease, he may be detained for a certain time to determine whether the disease is curable.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I can not answer the Senator. The Senator's amendment was not brought to my attention.

Mr. DRYDEN. While the Senator from Georgia is looking for the amendment, I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana what head tax it is proposed to charge under the bill as it now stands? What is the head tax provided by the bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The head tax in the bill stands as it was reported from the committee.

Mr. DRYDEN. Three dollars?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think it is $3.

Mr. DRYDEN. If that is true, I move that the head tax be reduced to $2.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; I see by reference to the bill that the head tax is $3.

Mr. DRYDEN. I move to make it $2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, page 1, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of $3 for each and every alien immigrant, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. On page 18, commencing in line 5, I move to strike out the following words:

Any alien who becomes a public charge by reason of lunacy, idiocy, or epilepsy within two years after arrival will be presumed to have become such from causes existing prior to landing, unless the contrary be affirmatively shown.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if he does not intend to move to strike out certain words in section 34? I refer to the words: "Or other place, subject to the jurisdiction thereof." I move, in line 16, page 25, to strike out those words.

The section reads:

That for the purposes of this act the words "United States" as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

It occurs to me that if we ever get the Panama Canal treaty through, we may not want to be embarrassed by those words in this act, and I hope the Senator will agree that they may go out.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not object to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 16, page 25, after the word "territory," it is proposed to strike out the words "or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think that amendment, if adopted, would——

Mr. KEAN. We can not hear the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think that amendment, if adopted, would leave the section rather imperfect.

Mr. GALLINGER. So it would. We will have to correct it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There will be some further amendment necessary if this amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. It should be amended, it seems to me, by inserting after the word "waters" the word "or," and after the word "territory" the word "thereof;" so as to read: "United States and any waters or territory thereof."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Striking out "or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof?"

Mr. SPOONER. Would not that leave Hawaii and Porto Rico and the Philippines open to paupers and criminals and all the classes who are prohibited by the proposed act from coming into the United States proper?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think not.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that the proposed amendment really reconstructs this whole immigration policy. I understand that this immigration policy includes the dependencies of which the Senator from Wisconsin has just spoken. It seems to me we ought not, in a minute or two, to strike that all out. I for one want to know whether this bill, if amended as proposed, will leave them out. It is considered by most people that the unrestricted immigration of Chinese laborers into this country is very bad. Are they to be left to go into our dependencies unrestricted?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. This bill does not affect Chinese immigration.

Mr. HOAR. That is a mere illustration.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Chinese are excluded by a law which is not to be affected if the pending bill becomes a law.

Mr. HOAR. I used that merely as an illustration.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am not quite satisfied with the section if amended as proposed.

Mr. KEAN. Is this a private conversation between the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Massachusetts? We can not hear.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts look at section 4?

Mr. HOAR. I used the Chinese as an illustration. How about lepers; how about insane people; how about paupers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 16, after the word "waters," insert the word "or;" and after the word "territory" strike out the words "or other place subject to the jurisdiction."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. HOAR. I object to it. I want to know something about it. It is a very great question, in which the rights of human beings are at stake.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not hurrying this bill at all.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is quite agreeable to me to have it go over to the next Congress, I will say.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am doubtful about the effect of the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I want to have it right.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes; I know that the Senator does.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I have not yielded the floor. The Senator from Wisconsin called my attention to section 2, and I had already thought of section 4.

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, insane persons, epileptics, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with a loathsome or with a dangerous contagious disease; persons who have been convicted of a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, etc.

Then in section 4 is the prohibition of the importation into the United States of women and girls for the purpose of prostitution, and so on.

Now, I want to know, before this amendment is adopted, if anybody will tell me, whether the 10,000,000 people and more for whom we are legislating, against their will, at any rate, have any protection left?

I suppose there never has been a more painful and careful performance of duty than the Committee on Immigration performed in the consideration of this bill. It is a bill which it seems to me has been framed with admirable skill. The committee thought up to this moment that the protection of the 10,000,000 people from these atrocities was necessary and put it in a bill to bring it to pass. Now, we are asked, late in the afternoon, within three days of the end of the session, in a debate which can last but a few minutes, to strike it all out. I want to have that explained by the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that the committee intended by the provisions of this bill to protect all the people to whom the Senator has referred.

Mr. HOAR. If we strike out these words will they not be left without protection?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am inclined to think if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted they will be.

Mr. HOAR. Left without protection?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Left without protection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it is very evident we are getting a little muddled here. I am very certain I do not know how to vote on this bill now. They have twisted it, and turned it, and changed it, and proposed so many alterations that I do not think the chairman of the committee is prepared to say just what the situation is; and if we are going to vote on the bill to-night, I think we will have to talk a little more. I should like to move an adjournment.

Several SENATORS. No, no!

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, this is a very important matter. The bill as it is written received the careful consideration of the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the Senator is accepting every amendment that any Senator offers.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from South Carolina is not quite accurate in that statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the Senator from South Carolina always tries to be. If the Senator from Indiana will cite him to one that he has refused to accept, the Senator from South Carolina will be glad to know of it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The principal amendments which have been made have been agreed upon between the Senators offering them and the committee. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire has not been accepted by the Senator now in charge of the bill. The Senator in charge of the bill thinks the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire goes further than that Senator intended it should.

The point the Senator from New Hampshire has in mind is whether the language in section 34 would exclude foreign immigrants from employment in the construction of an isthmian canal if they shall be found to be necessary because of the inhospitable climate upon the Isthmus. The Senator from New Hampshire, if I correctly understand him, does not desire the bill to exclude aliens from employment upon that work if they should be needed. Now, whether the language that he proposes reaches further than the purpose he has in view, is a question. I am inclined to think that it goes further than he intends it should go.

Mr. HOAR. Why would not an amendment giving the President or some department of the Government the power to regulate the admission of persons to the territory covered by the isthmian canal until further action by Congress answer the purpose?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will prepare an amendment to that effect——

Mr. HOAR. It perhaps would cover the purpose sought by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It would.

Mr. MCCOMAS. May I suggest to the Senator that it might be made shorter than that? The phrase, "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States," is the precise phrase of the fourteenth amendment.

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

I suggest the insertion of the word "now," so as to read "now subject."

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think that covers it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. DEPEW. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw his motion. I have a bill here, a little revenue bill of three lines, which I am anxious to have considered.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have been standing here waiting an hour to call up a little bill. Each of a number of Senators wants to get a little bill through, but instead of taking up unobjected bills, we get up and debate them as though we were in regular business session in the morning. This is an important matter. I want restricted immigration, but I confess I am muddled, if the Senator from Wisconsin is not. If he can tell me exactly what this bill means, with all these various amendments, I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. SPOONER. I could, but I will not now.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from South Carolina withdraw his motion for just a moment?

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from South Carolina does not want to be obstinate with his colleagues, and of course he will withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLAY. I will state to the Senator from South Carolina that for two months the Committee on Immigration had this bill before them. We had hearings, and gave it most careful consideration, and, in my opinion, with the amendments adopted it is a great improvement over the present law. There is no disagreement; the committee is unanimous, and if we can not vote on the bill this evening the Senator ought to agree to the fixing of some time to-morrow for taking a vote on the bill, so that it may be passed and go back to the House and become a law. It is an important matter.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I desire to appeal to the Senator from South Carolina to permit us to conclude the bill this evening. It has received very careful consideration, and I think the section to which the Senator from New Hampshire has called attention will be relieved of the objections in his mind by adopting the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

Mr. TILLMAN. In view of what the Senator from Georgia has said, I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Did the Senator from Maryland offer an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. There is one now pending.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Maryland suggested that the word "now" be inserted in line 16, page 25, after the word "place;" so that it will read:

Or other place now subject to the jurisdiction thereof.

I offer that amendment on his behalf.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had intended to make a single observation about this matter. I have not been permitted to do so, because so many other Senators have been discussing it. My sole purpose is to prevent the application of the stringent provisions of this proposed law to the strip of land of which we will have jurisdiction should we ratify the treaty with Panama. My impression is that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland is a better amendment than the one suggested by me.

I had intended to perfect the section by adding two or three words which I think would have made it perfectly plain. If those words had been stricken out, I intended to move to amend it so that it would read "to mean the United States and any waters, territory, or possessions thereof." I think that would have helped us out of the dilemma. But if the insertion of the word "now" will accomplish the same result, that is all I am after, and I withdraw my amendment. I hope that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Maryland will be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, I want to occupy a very few minutes in calling attention to this bill, and particularly to one provision in it which I hope will go out by consent, but which I am not rash enough to believe will go out in that way, and perhaps not at all.

The bill as it came from the other body was very hostile to the New England border. Whether it was so intended or not I do not know, but its hostility was written in every line of the first section. The Senate has improved it very much by making sundry amendments, and I will venture to express the hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate may see to it that the amendments made by the Senate are kept in the bill.

I chance to know that there are interests in this country, very powerful interests, that propose to have the bill become a law, if it does become a law, substantially as it came from the other House. I have in my possession a letter which indicates that, and where the statement is made that that result will be accomplished. I hope it will not be accomplished.

Now, Mr. President, here is what I particularly want to call attention to. That I may not be accused of consuming time unnecessarily, I will go directly to it. In section 2, on page 3, the committee, for some reason or other, have gone beyond legislating in reference to immigrants coming into this country and have inserted the contract-labor law in this bill, so that the bill as it stands is not only an immigration bill and will be not only an immigration law if it shall be enacted, but it will be likewise a contract-labor law.

I see no reason, Mr. President, why, when we have a statute at the present time in almost if not identical language with the provision in this bill, and when in the sundry civil appropriation bill we have appropriated $150,000 to execute that statute, we should transfer it to this bill. I think I know one reason why it is transferred here. I am credibly informed that a very high official in the Immigration Bureau has declared that if that provision is put in this bill, he will see to it that it is applied to the French-Canadians who come from Canada to do work in the New England States.

It will be an injustice to New England. It will be disastrous to our interests to an extent that can not be computed by the Senators who are urging the passage of this bill. And I make an appeal that inasmuch as we have a contract law on the statute book, executed by a great Department of the Government, and we are appropriating all the money they ask to enable them to execute that law, we ought not to transfer that contract-labor law and make it a part of an immigration bill.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say about it. I give notice to the Senators who are here representing New England States that in my judgment if that becomes a part of this law New England will rue the day when this bill passed the Senate of the United States.

I move, Mr. President, to strike out from the bill, commencing on line 19, page 3, these words:

Persons whose migration to the United States has been induced by offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements, parole or special, express or implied, of labor or work, or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States.

If those words shall go out of the bill we will then have an immigration bill, and if it shall be enacted into a law we will have a law very stringent in its provisions, regulating the coming of immigrants into the United States, and I think that is all we ought to put into an immigration bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Is it the objection to the contract-labor law as it is inserted in the bill that it will be enforced, and is there a suggestion that it is not being enforced?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not made that suggestion.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know; but if it is the same provision that is already incorporated in the law, what harm can it do to incorporate it in this law?

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, what good can it do?

Mr. PATTERSON. The probability is that it will be placed in the hands of a department that will enforce it, and the probability is that it is not enforced now. I would judge so from the zeal——

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a difference as to how a law is enforced. A law may be enforced sensibly or it may be enforced without much exercise of common sense.

Mr. PATTERSON. A law should be enforced; and from my standpoint the reasons given by the Senator from New Hampshire point very strongly to the propriety of retaining the provision in the bill as reported from the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is where the Senator and I differ. We have this law on the statute book. It is under the jurisdiction of a great Department of this Government. They have asked us for $150,000 to enforce it, and you will find that appropriation in the sundry civil bill. I have no doubt that the law is being enforced reasonably and justly at the present time. I have no doubt of it in the world.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know what the Senator's meaning of the word "reasonably" is.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge, or the Senator from New Hampshire, what is the significance of the language which it is moved to strike out:

Persons whose migration to the United States has been induced by offers, solicitations, promises, or agreements, parole or special, express or implied, of labor or work, or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States.

Is it supposed that the word "migration" only included persons who changed their domicile from one country to another and that crossing the border for a temporary service like that of the woodchopper in Maine or New Hampshire, who comes down from Canada in the dead of winter and goes home again in the spring, was not covered by it?

I sympathize, of course—no Senator from a New England State would fail to sympathize—with the feeling of the Senator from New Hampshire. We do not want to interrupt this vast Canadian immigration. Those men come down and after a while they stay. When they come to stay they are not induced by a particular offer of a job. They know there are plenty of places in factories for work.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it is very evident that we can not get a vote on this bill to-night, and I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he ask that some time be fixed to-morrow when we can discuss it and clarify it a little.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will do that if the Senator will allow me just to make an answer to the query of the Senator from Massachusetts. The language to which he has directed attention is found in the existing law.

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It has stood there for a good many years. The interpretation put upon it at the time of its passage was the interpretation which the honorable Senator has just now put upon it, and in its enforcement it has been construed in harmony with that interpretation.

Mr. HOAR. Now, if I may go one step further, I understand that that is a reasonable interpretation, that the word "migration" does not mean a man who comes in to stay six weeks, and that that is a change of his domicile. That is the interpretation put upon it by one department of the Government, under which there is no complaint. There is no complaint of labor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. None whatever.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me upon this law as interpreted. It is now proposed to reenact the law in a bill which is to be administered by somebody else who a Senator on this floor says he understands has avowed that he takes a different view of the law, and he is going to enforce it in a very different way. Why should that be kept in the bill?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered at 12 o'clock to-morrow, and that we may have an early vote upon it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator had better fix the hour.

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Fix the hour.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will change the request and ask unanimous consent that we may vote upon this bill at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Before that request is agreed to, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will not consent to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. There can not be much use in putting that provision in the bill.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I would prefer not to do it at the present time.

Mr. HOAR. Then I object to granting the consent at the present time.

Mr. DUBOIS. We can vote on the amendment to-morrow, I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. Let us fix a time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this measure may be taken up for consideration to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And I ask that it may be voted upon at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. I shall object to a vote until this matter of the amendment is settled.

Mr. DUBOIS. Would that agreement cut out any other amendments?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. No; all pending amendments and amendments offered, as well as the bill itself, would be voted upon.

Mr. HOAR. We may want to discuss it in the Senate. It is an important matter.

Mr. President, my State and your State are—I was going to say full of these people. At any rate, all New England has these Canadian Frenchmen who come over the line. Formerly they were woodchoppers. Now they come for other temporary employment, expecting to go back again; and, so far as I know, there is not a labor union or a walking delegate or anybody else who objects. They come under the construction which has been put on the law by the Department.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. And it is a matter which nobody complains of. Now, then, a Senator rises in his seat and says it is proposed to put that provision into a bill to be administered by somebody else; and the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. TELLER. Who is that somebody?

Mr. McCOMAS. It is some person in the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator to answer me a question.

Mr. HOAR. Let me finish first the proposition, and then I will yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. HOAR. I will, in a moment.

Now, the Senator from New Hampshire says he understands that a person is to be charged with the administration of this bill who says that if we pass it he shall construe it in a very different way, excluding all this class of people, who come in in peace and quiet. I do not want to fix a time to cut this question off in the whirl of business to-morrow without having that thing understood.

Mr. TILLMAN and Mr. FAIRBANKS addressed the Chair.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to ask the Senator from Massachusetts——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the Senator from Massachusetts yielded the floor?

Mr. HOAR. I will yield for the question of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was going to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how it could be possible that an abuse could grow up in the administration of a law which has been interpreted for a long time by one department of the Government by a change in the policy of another department. Would not that be appealed to the courts? Do your Massachusetts courts take no cognizance of cases where a man's rights are invaded and he is refused the protection which this law or any other law will give him?

Mr. HOAR. This thing is not to be settled by the Massachusetts courts. It is to be settled by the United States courts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Can not the Senator from Massachusetts trust the United States courts? We have to trust them down our way.

Mr. HOAR. When I hear the lion roar in the lobby I would keep him out rather than trust the court to getting him out after he comes in.

Mr. TILLMAN. But if this is already the law, and it is a question of the interpretation of the law, the only objection I can see that the Senator has is that it should not be transferred from one bureau to another.

I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that if he will name 2 o'clock to-morrow as the hour for voting and that we shall take up the bill as soon as we meet, I think we can come to some understanding. At least we can vote in or vote out any amendments we want.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and all amendments pending thereto and all amendments which may be offered shall be voted upon at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I object. If the Senator will look over this amendment and get some solution, as I am quite sure he will, we can vote on it in five minutes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish the Senator would withdraw his objection, because he is objecting to a matter now in the law. It has never been abused, and there is no reasonable probability of its future abuse.

Mr. HOAR. But I would rather see what conclusion the Senator comes to before I consent.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator knows that I would not be urgent about this were it not for the fact that it is an important measure. It is a codification of the laws with respect to immigration and contract labor which are found scattered through many volumes. It was suggested by the Immigration Bureau. It received the consideration of the committee for many weeks.

We are nearing the close of the session, and it would be unfortunate to have the bill fail. Its administrative features have been suggested by long experience, and they are of the utmost importance. The purpose of the committee is in entire harmony with the suggestions of the Senators from New Hampshire and Massachusetts. There is no desire to deprive the French Canadians from the privileges they have enjoyed and which they now enjoy. The bill makes no change whatever as to the freedom of their coming and going.

Mr. HOAR. Then, Mr. President, let this amendment be adopted. The bill will have to go into conference. If the Senator finds there is a good reason against retaining the amendment, he will come to a reasonable conclusion.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will not agree to the amendment to-night. We can, no doubt, adjust the matter to-morrow, if the Senator shall still think his fears are well founded. May we not have an agreement to vote at 2 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. GALLINGER. When does the Senator propose to commence the consideration of the bill? We should know when we are to start before we conclude when we shall stop.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is a matter——

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator from Massachusetts objects, and I will simply give notice. Mr. President, that after the routine morning business to-morrow morning, I shall move to take up the bill for further consideration, and I hope that we may speedily dispose of it. There should be no great difficulty in doing so.

LIST OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, a schedule of all claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, etc., amounting to $139,877.37; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

PORT OF NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 16885) to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement. It is a very short bill of only three lines.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. DEPEW. I hope the Senator from Florida will let this bill be passed. It is a matter of very small moment. It is a local matter entirely.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I shall make the motion, then, at the conclusion of this bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask consent for the consideration of a bill that will take, I think, not a moment. If there is any objection, I will immediately withdraw it. It is Senate bill 7369.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 7369) to authorize street railway companies in the District of Columbia to convey small freight, express matter, etc.; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. Does the bill authorize the street railway companies to make this transportation at any hour in the day?

Mr. TELLER. That is what I rose to inquire about.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that other cities have this very condition of things. It does allow them to put on cars specially for this purpose, just as we have mail cars, not to interfere, of course, with the ordinary traffic.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me they ought to do this work at night and not in the daytime, or they ought to do it after the usual hours of travel.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is for the convenience of the suburban residents. The Commissioners are in favor of it, and the street railway companies are in favor of it.

Mr. TELLER. Of course they are.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the people are in favor of it. It has been recommended by everybody. I hope the bill may pass.

Mr. HOAR. Is it a House bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is a Senate bill.

Mr. TELLER. It is not worth while to consider it if it is a Senate bill. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 28, 1903, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1903.

[Continuation of legislative day of February 26, 1903.]

The House was called to order by the Speaker at 11 a. m.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, manifestly no quorum; and we can not transact important business, although we can turn members out, without it.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair the point is well taken.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The officers will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will bring in absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to respond to their names:

Babcock,	Brantley,	Connell,	Douglas,
Bellamy,	Bromwell,	Conry,	Dwight,
Belmont,	Burk, Pa.	Cooper, Wis.	Edwards,
Benton,	Burnett,	Corliss,	Evans,
Bingham,	Calderhead,	Cowherd,	Foerderer,
Blackburn,	Caldwell,	Davidson,	Fox,
Blakeney,	Cochran,	Davis, Fla.	Glass,

Glenn,	Lamb,	Perkins,	Spight,
Goldfogle,	Lassiter,	Pugsley,	Stewart, N. J.
Gooch,	Lewis, Ga.	Ransdell, La.	Sutherland,
Gordon,	Littauer,	Rhea,	Swann,
Graham,	Little,	Robertson, La.	Talbert,
Green, Pa.	McDermott,	Robinson, Nebr.	Thayer,
Griffith,	McLain,	Rucker,	Tompkins, N. Y.
Griggs,	Maddox,	Ruppert,	Vandiver,
Hanbury,	Maynard,	Selby,	Wachter,

Jett,	Naphen,	Shelden,	Wilson,
Kahn,	Norton,	Skiles,	Wooten,
Kleberg,	Patterson, Pa.	Smith, Wm. Alden	Young.
Knox,	Patterson, Tenn.	Southwick,

The SPEAKER. Present, 257. A quorum is present. The doors will be opened.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On yesterday I understood the gentleman from New York to state that the Agricultural appropriation bill had come to the House from the Senate. I rise to inquire what committee that bill has been referred to?

The SPEAKER. It has not been referred to a committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask if, under the rules, it should not be referred to the Committee on Agriculture?

The SPEAKER. There is a certain discretion given to the Speaker, and he always has exercised it, to hold the appropriation bills for the usual custom of having them referred to a conference committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The House having refused to give unanimous consent on yesterday to allow this bill to go to conference, I ask if it is not proper for the Speaker now to refer that bill to the Committee on Agriculture, so that it may proceed at once?

The SPEAKER. That was done with the Agricultural bill; unanimous consent was refused, but, exercising that discretion, the Chair in due time will attend to that unless the House votes to take some other course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to recognize the gentleman to make that motion.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 17202. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4825. An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

LEVI L. REED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without approval, House bill No. 10095, entitled "An act for the relief of Levi L. Reed."

The beneficiary of this bill was enlisted July 24, 1861, at Reading, Pa., and was discharged from Battery H, Fifth United States Artillery, July 24, 1864, at Nashville, Tenn., by expiration of service, a sergeant. He reenlisted July 26, 1864, for three years, in Troop H, Fifth United States Cavalry, deserted therefrom July 31, 1865, while a corporal, at Cumberland, Md., and never returned to his command. Through his attorney he was furnished a "deserter's release" on June 2, 1892, in view of the act of Congress, approved April 11, 1890, amending the one hundred and third article of war, so as to prescribe a limitation as to prosecution of the offense of desertion.

This action is regarded as releasing the soldier from service as well as protecting him from liability to apprehension and trial, so that, being no longer in the service, he can not be discharged therefrom. Finally, as he deserted from the military service while holding the rank of corporal, I do no regard him as deserving an honorable discharge.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1903.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will also read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue an honorable discharge to Levi L. Reed, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, as of date July 31, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and on that I demand the previous question.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAY and others) there were—ayes 164, noes 87.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], to refer this veto message, with the accompanying bill, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 104, answered "present" 12, not voting 75; as follows:

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF WAGONER AGAINST BUTLER.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker——
Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.
Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. FLEMING. I send a resolution to the Clerk's desk, which I will ask to have read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it appears from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 26, 1903, that by actual count and announcement by the Speaker pro tempore a quorum of the House was not present when the resolutions were voted upon declaring that James J. Butler was not elected, and that GEORGE C. R. WAGONER was duly elected, a Representative in the Fifty-seventh Congress from the Twelfth Missouri District, and that the point of no quorum was duly raised upon the vote on each of said resolutions, and that the same in each instance was overruled by the Speaker pro tempore in violation of the Constitution, the rules of the House, and the practice of all parliamentary bodies:

Resolved, That the announcement by the Speaker pro tempore that said resolutions were adopted was in fact untrue, and that said James J. Butler is still entitled to his seat in this House, and that the said GEORGE C. R. WAGONER is not now entitled to the same.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.
Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.
The SPEAKER. This motion is clearly one that a member of the House has a right to make, and it intervenes as a preferential motion.
Mr. FLEMING. But I did not yield the floor.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.
Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 109, answered "present" 9, not voting 72, as follows:

So the resolution was laid on the table.
Mr. BEIDLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.
The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in his seat and listening when his name was called, and did he fail to hear it?
Mr. BEIDLER. I was not. I was absent.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:
Until further notice:
Mr. FOERDERER with Mr. COCHRAN.
On this vote:
Mr. BARNEY with Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. MORRIS with Mr. GLASS.
Mr. CONNER with Mr. ROBINSON of Nebraska.
Mr. STORM with Mr. HENRY of Mississippi.
Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. CLAYTON.
Mr. HOPKINS with Mr. GLASS.
Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. HENRY of Texas.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, and to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, and disagree to all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the rules of this Republican House, does not this bill go to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered that question once before, in reply to the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I respectfully make that inquiry.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And will answer it again to the gentleman from Tennessee. It has been the long-recognized custom of the House that there was a certain degree of latitude or discretion lodged in the presiding officer as to when an appropriation bill should be referred, and this bill has just come over from the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am satisfied of that, Mr. Speaker; but under the rule now, I ask—under the Republican rules of the Republican House—if this bill does not properly go to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have now. I had not when the Chair rapped.

The SPEAKER. All of the rules of this Republican House have been and are being sacredly enforced.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, certainly!

The SPEAKER. And will be to the end of this Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that is all I ask, that the rule be enforced, and I ask for the regular order, and the enforcement of Republican rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZENOR. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the request of the gentleman from Illinois is denied.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We ask you to enforce your rules; that is all.

COMMERCE AND LABOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 17520) making appropriations for the Department of Commerce and Labor for the fiscal years 1903 and 1904, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama reserves all points of order on the appropriation bill just reported by the gentleman from Indiana from the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolutions of the House numbered 468 and 470, have had the same under consideration, and report the following in lieu thereof, with the recommendation that it do pass:

"Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this rule, and at any time thereafter during the remainder of this session, it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table any general appropriation bill returned with Senate amendments, and such amendments having been read, the question shall be at once taken without debate or intervening motion on the following question: 'Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?' And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees, without the intervention of any motion. If the House shall decide said motion in the negative, the effect of said vote shall be to agree to the said amendments.

"And further, For the remainder of this session the motion to take a recess shall be a privileged motion and take precedence of the motion to adjourn."

[Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has just asked of the House the right to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the Senate amendments, and send it to conference—a request for unanimous consent that I venture to say never in the history of this House before was refused. This is one of the great supply bills for the maintenance of the Federal Government. It is one of eight great supply bills that have not as yet gone to conference. This is Friday of the week preceding the week in which, under the terms of the Constitution, the House will adjourn. There remain after to-day but one other secular day in this week and substantially two days in next week, and in face of that situation we find the minority blocking the wheels of government and threatening to cut off supplies. [Manifestations of derision on the Democratic side.]

I look not generally for Democratic applause. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Yesterday we had eight roll calls, and so far to-day, up to this time, although we met at 11 o'clock, we have been unable to transact any business by reason of the obstruction on the part of the minority [applause on the Democratic side]—a childish proceeding, which seems to be liked [applause on the Republican side] by the elderly children on the other side of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the House to what, under existing conditions, might ensue if this rule were not adopted. There are on the Speaker's table 29 bills, each having a Senate amendment, which must be concurred in. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] By a simple motion to concur there would be 29 roll calls of at least thirty minutes each, or fourteen and one-half hours—three legislative days of the ordinary length. There are at present on the Speaker's table three general appropriation bills, one having 85 Senate amendments, another 41, and the other 151, or 277 in all. The yeas and nays may be demanded on a motion to concur in each amendment, giving 277 roll calls of thirty minutes each, or one hundred and thirty-eight hours, or a fraction over twenty-seven legislative days of the usual length. There are five other general appropriation bills to be returned with Senate amendments besides the three already on the Speaker's table.

Now, if we are to transact business—I do not refer to ordinary legislation—if we are to supply the necessary means for the maintenance of the Government before this session of Congress adjourns it is absolutely essential that we pass this rule. This rule will enable us to send the supply bills to conference and to secure final action thereon.

Now, just one other word. This rule has no relation to legislation of any kind except general appropriation bills. It does not affect the status of any other bill or bills that are now in the House, and it is therefore to be considered as an expediency measure to get to their proper places the great appropriation bills that we must pass before this Congress adjourns, and that, despite the opposition of the minority, by the unanimous and organized action of the majority this side of the House will pass before the adjournment of Congress. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I w ll yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, if he wants the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want the twenty minutes' time we have under the rules ordinarily.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that everything comes to the man who waits. Ten years ago the Republican party, more than ten years ago, adopted what was known as the Reed rules, and justified themselves before the country in doing so, because they said these rules were necessary to transact public business; and to-day the Republican party witnesses the lamentable spectacle of having their leaders on the floor of this House make open confession to the country that they can not do business under their rules. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why is it necessary to bring in this special rule? Is it expected that in order that the Republican party may transact business that the opposition shall lie supinely on their backs and have no voice in the Government or the business of the country? That is what you seem to ask.

Is there anything unusual or drastic or wrong in that portion of the rules of this House that says that legislation put upon appropriation bills by the Senate of the United States shall have the same consideration, the same careful consideration that is given to legislation enacted in this House? That is all the rule requires; that is all we have demanded in this instance. The rules of this House from the beginning have said that legislation enacted shall be considered by a committee of this House. More than that, it is said that appropriation bills shall be considered by a Committee of the Whole, where each individual member of the House may exercise his rights and voice the wishes of his constituency. So when a bill comes back from the Senate of the United States carrying additional appropriations or new legislation it is customary and right under the rules—it is the order of this House and always has been, according to the rules of the House, that appropriation bills shall go to a committee having those questions before it on the demand of any person who thinks it affects the rights of his constituents. And they are entitled to demand that they be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Now, here are these great appropriation bills carrying numbers of amendments about important matters, numbers of amendments that each member of the House is interested in, and yet gentlemen on the other side of the House say it is an outrage that the minority should have the right to have some say so in the legislation of this country. How else can we have an opportunity to consider these bills and vote upon the different propositions? The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows, and every other member in this House knows, that if one of these bills with important legislation on it once goes to a conference and the conferees, the Rupublican conferees, agree on a unanimous report, and that report comes to the Speaker's desk, we have but one vote, and that is a vote to concur or to nonconcur in the conference report, taking away from us every opportunity to consider it in detail and get it before the House in a legitimate or proper way.

And yet we reach the stage in the proceedings where a Republican Congress has tampered with public time; has adjourned from day to day here without transacting the public business; has taken up time in turning members from their places without due consideration by the Elections Committee; have had numerous days spent in private business; reaching the last days of the session, they wake up to find that the country demands that they shall give some attention to the public business. Under their rules, they say, it is impossible to consider the public business where the individual member of the House may exercise his judgment and his voice in the matter. In other words, this drastic rule that is brought before the House to-day says that the leaders of the Republican party shall legislate for the country and the rank and file on that side shall have no voice in the proceedings. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] does not take a broad enough view of the situation that surrounds him. He is standing in the midst of a circle, and looking upward instead of looking about him. Ten years ago, it is said—it was longer ago than that—we adopted the Reed rules, and to-day the gentleman from Alabama will feel the effect of the Reed rules. [Laughter on the Republican side.] We are not abandoning the Reed rules. We are enforcing them. It is a part and parcel of the rules of the House, made by a Republican House, and adopted afterwards by a Democratic House. That is the halter that my friend does not like the feeling of when it draws. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of the Republican side of this House to save the country from an extra session. The other side has nothing at stake in this. If this programme as they have determined upon is carried out, they will rush heedlessly and recklessly upon an extra session of Congress. The injury to the country, the disturbance of business, the enormous expense that will come of it is nothing to them. I do not hold them responsible for it; they have been so long without any responsibility that they do not know the effect of it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] Anything to hurt, anything to hinder, anything to delay, anything to bring disaster—disaster in the form of grasshoppers, smallpox, the murrain in cattle—all bring stock and store to the Democratic crib. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

We are proceeding in an orderly manner. The rules of the House provide this remedy for obstruction. The rules of the House are being enforced literally, but faithfully and honestly, and I want to say one word to our friends on this side. We have provided in this rule to bring about simply what has been from time immemorial transacted by the unanimous consent of the House. We are simply taking an obstruction out of the way that never since I have been a member of this House was ever before put in the way of the transaction of public business. This is the only remedy; this is a salutary remedy; this is an effective remedy. The outcry on the other side shows how the lash of possibilities and probabilities cut and hurt.

Now, if this rule is not passed, what will be the effect on the House of Representatives? Everybody knows that we will stagger forward and do the best we can to pass the appropriation bills. So, if you defeat this rule, you defeat the possibility of any bill other than appropriation bills being passed in this House. What is the use, therefore, of talking about opposition to this measure in order to help some other measure, or some other set of measures? This is the only road to the possibility of any other legislation with our duty-bound struggle to pass appropriation bills. Join with the Democrats to overthrow this rule and you have turned over to them an organized purpose to prevent even the passage of the appropriation bills and cause an extra session. How can you or anybody get any benefit from that? I am interested in one of the great bills before this House personally and officially. How can you get any benefit by putting into the hands of the Democrats the power to stand menacing the future of this legislation and the power to cut off all other legislation? Give us this rule and we will pass the appropriation bills; we will get them out of the way and do such other legislation as may be deemed wise and best for the country.

Let the Democrats on the other side take the responsibility of defeating the measures that interest their own constituents and for which their constituents have been praying—for which their constituents are earnestly seeking. Let them go home, if they care to do it, with the record that they have attempted, at least, to strangle the life of the Government by defeating the appropriation bills. [Applause on the Republican side.] It will not be anything new. It will be no new demonstration of a mild type of nonpatriotism—nothing of that kind whatever. They would take the weapon of the hungry soldier; they would take the weapon of the idle official, and strangle the Government by strangling the appropriation bills. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I consumed—myself and my colleague?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used ten minutes—himself five, and five he yielded to the gentleman from Ohio—and he gave twenty minutes to the other side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suppose the gentleman computes the time as we do. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. [Loud applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, no one, I think, could fail to be touched by the pathos in the voice and in the manner of our venerable friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] [laughter] appealing to the gentlemen on his side to forego any spirit of independence or individuality that they may have and submit quietly to the lash which the leaders are about to apply to them. It is not for me to say what the effect of that appeal will be. It is useless for me even to speculate upon it.

Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio has overlooked one or two things that are among the resources of the majority in time of extremity; and I was somewhat surprised to know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] apparently had overlooked those things himself, because there was a melancholy chord in his plea to the House and in his song of triumph. There was a reference that seemed somewhat sad and somewhat apprehensive, I thought.

Two things the gentleman has overlooked; and I mention them to give him heart and courage. One is that you now have WAGONER among you. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] The other is that it was demonstrated last night that there could be found in this House one man who would take the chair and override everything every other man conceded ought to be respected. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Perhaps the modesty of the gentleman from Pennsylvania caused him to refrain from reassuring his fellows upon the other side that if the worst should come—if extremities should be reached—they might always rely upon him to do that which nobody else would do. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from Ohio felicitates himself upon the fact that the "Reed rules" are to be enforced. I never was an admirer of Mr. Reed, while recognizing, of course, his great qualities; but I would to God that a man of the ability and the pride of character of Reed could be found in the chair when things are to be done under the "Reed rules," instead of a man of the less ability of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, without any of Reed's pride of character. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hope that as we progress in these affairs of legislation—as we go on in the dispatch of the public business—it will not be necessary often to call for the exercise of the peculiar talents displayed last night, when there was a denial of the immemorial right to a division—when the question of the presence of a quorum was ignored—when a minority, without authority, without right, without any decent pretense of right, did that which only a majority can do, and which, I am charitable enough to conclude, a majority was ashamed to do; and therefore it had to be done by a minority.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very peculiar rule, as I suppose the gentlemen who formulated it must have discovered. After the adoption of this rule—and I hope the apprehensions of the gentleman from Ohio are groundless, that there may be somebody over there who has enough independence and individuality, enough of regard for his constituents, to fail to be whipped in—if this rule should be adopted, then, according to its terms—

It shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table any general appropriation bill returned with Senate amendments, and such amendments having been read the question shall be at once taken without debate or intervening motion on the following question: "Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?" And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees, without the intervention of any motion. If the House shall decide said motion in the negative, the effect of said vote shall be to agree to the said amendments.

We can stand that as well as you can, gentlemen. Under that rule a vote against going into conference is a vote for all the amendments—one or fifty, one hundred or a thousand—a vote for all of them. Do you suppose legislation passed in that way will stand the test of the courts? Do you suppose that there, too, the whip and spur may prove effective? Do you suppose that there, too, the lash of the "boss" may count, and that the independence and conscience and judgment of the judiciary may be lost? I think not. [Loud and long-continued applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I confess that I was one of the Democrats who, a few hours before it took place, had some doubt whether the Republicans of this House would resort to the unconstitutional and outrageous methods which they did carry into effect yesterday. I think we may as well be plain, and as I was one of the eyewitnesses last night I wish to say that I saw every Republican on the other side of the House rise on the resolution and stand until he was counted by the Speaker pro tempore, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and there were only 162, with less than 8 members on this side—either 6 or 7—while it required 177 to constitute a quorum.

The division was made, 162 on that side and 2 on this, with not a half dozen members in the House who failed to vote. The point of no quorum was made, for it is a constitutional requirement that a quorum must be present to do business. The point was overruled and decided as frivolous. The majority seated a member in this House when there was not a quorum present, and they can not bring the affidavits of members to show that there was a quorum of this House present when that business was transacted. Not only that, but all the roll calls of yesterday show that at no time were there over 165 Republicans present or voting. Taking those present who voted as present to help make a quorum, the highest count of the record shows 165, and yet the Republican Speaker last night, at a time when necessary, was able to count 174 Republicans present, no doubt more than were in Washington at the time.

I say that something ought to be done to put the seal of public condemnation upon such outrageous conduct. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the time has come when the members of this House are to be controlled by mere brutal force, such as was exercised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania last night—and let me remark in this connection that it is very unfortunate for the Republicans that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is the one who offers this rule, for the cause for it is due to his own unconstitutional and outrageous conduct perpetrated as Speaker pro tempore of the House on last evening—then I say something should be done to call the attention of the country to the pernicious and outrageous methods to which the Republicans resorted on yesterday in order to do an unjust act in an unconstitutional way. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I reserve the balance of my time, and yield it back to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time now remains to the minority?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will use a portion of his now, unless he intends to close in one speech.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I intend to close on this side in a single speech.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there never was a rule presented to this House as inexcusable as this rule. We are forced here by conditions which have been clearly and succinctly stated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] to make this fight as we are making it.

We endeavored, Mr. Speaker, to comply with the constitutional requirements, plain as they can be written in that document, and we were ruthlessly overridden. Nothing is left for us but to demand the yeas and nays upon questions that are presented here, and in doing so we only demand that the rules of the House be complied with. They are Republican rules made by a Republican House, and when we invoke the execution of those rules we are told that we are doing something unwarranted and unjustifiable under the the custom and under the law. I deny it, Mr. Speaker. We have a right and the country expects us to require you to legislate in conformity with your rules, and we intend to do it, let the consequences be what they may. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The first gentleman who spoke said that we are taking up the time unnecessarily and preventing the passage of necessary appropriation bills. What were you doing yesterday, gentlemen of the majority? Why did you not take up the hours spent from 12 until 8 last night in passing necessary supply bills? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Instead of presenting those bills, if you were sincere and honest—instead of presenting them, as you should have done if you wanted to relieve the country, you indulged yourselves in the pleasant pastime of unseating a member who had been justly and constitutionally elected to a seat in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And this you did without a quorum. I say, Mr. Speaker, advisedly, there was no quorum present when it was announced in this House on yesterday evening, and we know it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The record shows there was no quorum present. The gentleman temporarily in the chair did not undertake to say there was a quorum present, but he said that the call of the House, made at least a half hour before, and I think longer, showed that there was a quorum present. Nineteen gentlemen were marked "present" on that call, and the Chair stated that they had answered "present" when called. Were those gentlemen here an hour later in this Hall when they were counted "present" to make a quorum, or assumed to be present? The Chair did not condescend to make any count, although it was demanded regularly, but said the call of the House, made an hour before, showed that there was a quorum present.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, no; I can not stop. I wish I had the time. I do not wish to be disrespectful, but I can not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, there never was such a condition before presented to the House of Representatives as appeared yesterday evening. Some gentleman cites a precedent for the action taken yesterday by referring to the action of the Speaker in the Fifty-first Congress, who, after a roll call had shown that there was a quorum, a very little time thereafter saw fit to hold that a quorum was present and that a point of order that no quorum was present was dilatory. Now, that was not justifiable. No business had then intervened, but there was some excuse for his action then, because it was done within two or three or four or five minutes after the roll call, when the roll call showed a quorum.

But on yesterday evening the business following this roll call, which, it is claimed, showed a quorum, was protracted, as this record shows, for more than half an hour. The record does not show the exact time, but the intervening facts and circumstances show it, and I assert it here, and there are men here who know it to be true. And yet, taking that half hour after the close of the roll call and taking the half hour and more necessary for the calling of the roll, there was more than one hour from the time Mr. BABCOCK, whose name appears as one of the first on the roll, answered "present" and when he was considered present to make the quorum. It was not claimed that he was counted to make the quorum. And so with the other 18 gentlemen who were "considered" present for the purpose of making a quorum, in order that a member might be robbed of his seat.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the 19 members marked "present" on that call of the House were present an hour afterwards when they were considered present—not counted—considered present, assumed to be present, for the purpose of making this quorum. If they were not here, you did not have a quorum. If they were here, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, there was still not a quorum of this House present. The vote on a call for division showed there was less than a quorum. And, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. If they were here when the question was put by a viva voce vote and a division was demanded, the division was ruthlessly refused by the gentleman occupying the Chair, no reason being assigned. He did not even tell us it was dilatory. He ignored the request, and immediately afterwards, when the third request was made, he recognized the demand for a division. I inquired, "Why do you recognize the demand for a division now, after declining it only a moment ago?" No reason was given, but he ruthlessly, recklessly, arbitrarily overrode the minority and refused the simple request that there be a division in order that members of the House might be counted. And this at least an hour after the roll call showed the quorum.

Mr. Speaker, the result of it was you took the seat unjustly. You deprived a member of his right here, coming from a Democratic district, a district that has voted in favor of Democratic members of Congress almost without exception for thirty years, a district that voted the Democratic ticket for President, that voted it for governor in the last election, that votes it for the legislature in that county, that votes it for the municipal offices in that city, and that in their right to choose their Representative sent a Democrat here from a Democratic district. And yet you arbitrarily refused him his seat, and seated "Judge" WAGONER, of St. Louis. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER. There are nine minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield nine minutes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CANNON. I crave the attention of the House for, I hope, not over five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a government by the majority. The majority is responsible, from time to time, as the pendulum swings back and forth from one side of the House to the other. The majority has the right to legislate. The minority has the right to criticise. In the last analysis both are responsible to the people. The majority on yesterday saw proper, believing that they were doing righteous work, to seat a contestant. The minority saw proper, believing that they were doing a righteous work, to interpose every possible objection to the seating of the contestant. It was fought out to a finish. The contestant is seated. The contestee is unseated. There is only one appeal, and that is to the just public sentiment of the country. I might say bitter things, that the minority of the people of the Missouri Congressional district was represented in yesterday's sitting member, Mr. Butler, and that the majority is represented to-day by the sitting member, Judge WAGONER. That matter is over. It is behind us.

There are about four or five days in front of us until this Congress expires by limitation. Notice has come from the minority that no business shall be done until every roll call possible has been had. That would take three months' time. Now, the minority must abandon its obstructive tactics or the majority, under law—under the Reed rules, by which we can cut off dilatory action and under which the majority can make a temporary rule that will enable it to cut off all debate—must take that action and move on. If we fail to take it we are responsible, being in the majority. If we take it, having the power, we are still responsible, we but perform our duty.

I might stop and reply to the honorable gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], to whom I always listen with interest on account of the beauty and perfection——

Mr. DE ARMOND. I should be flattered if you would reply to me.

Mr. CANNON. On account of the beauty and perfection of his sentences; but, after all, when you come to analyze them, he proposes now not to put Butler in and to put WAGONER out; but he says, "Because in a contest in the American House of Representatives a majority saw proper to exercise its constitutional right and follow its judgment, I will not play; but with revenge in my actions, I will have this Congress end in nothing, so far as passing the necessary bills to supply the service of the Government is concerned." He is welcome to that position. He is responsible to his constituency. It is not for me to criticise him. He is full grown, and must choose his own course.

But as for me—and as I turn to this side of the House upon which rests the responsibility—I trust I can say as for us, we will move on. [Applause on the Republican side.] Upon us rests the burden of doing things. They say that "all things come to him who waits." [Laughter.] I say all good comes to the majority that does the best it can in performing the public business. [Applause on the Republican side.] There are many bills on the Calendar. One thing is certain, it will take, unless by much of unanimous consent, all of our time to dispose of these money bills that must pass or the Government stops. Other bills that are on the Calendar may be disposed of after this order is adopted and the conference committees get to work. There are scores of bills on the Calendar that the majority ought to dispose of. If you follow out your plan, they will go to their tomb. They are of that nature that would not necessitate an extra session; would not stop the wheels of Government.

Now, having said this much in good temper, I think, in cold blood and in courtesy, I can again say that we will move on with our majority and do the business that must be done, not that we want to run over the minority. I trust you will quit. [Laughter.] I trust a night or two nights' sleep will make you realize that you but punish yourselves, because we have the power and the determination here to transact that business that must be done, whatever you do, gentlemen. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Pennsylvania asks for the previous question:

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division.

Mr. DALZELL. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 113, answered "present" 10, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—167.

Mr. LANDIS with Mr. ELLIOTT.
Mr. MOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote. I was sitting in my seat, but there was more or less confusion around me, and I did not hear my name called.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called and did not hear it?
Mr. MOSS. I was.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.
The Clerk called the name of Mr. Moss; and he answered "aye," as above recorded.
Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to vote.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in his seat listening when his name should have been called?
Mr. FORDNEY. I was not.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not vote.
Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, on the roll call I voted "no." I was paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GROW. Mr. GROW is present; and if he is allowed to vote, I will permit my vote to stand.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can not be done.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report by its title.
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16910) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendments proposed by the Senate.
The Senate amendments were read.
The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

So the amendments of the Senate were disagreed to and a conference with the Senate was ordered.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. First, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. If I vote "aye," I vote to send the bill to conference, do I not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Now, suppose I am opposed to sending it to conference and vote "no," do I then vote in favor of all the amendments to the bill?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry at this stage of the proceedings. Call the gentleman.

The Clerk again called the name of Mr. RANDELL of Texas.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my vote of "no," and not being able to vote under the rule as I see proper, I will simply answer "present" and refuse to vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to the Senate amendments en bloc and ask for a conference with the Senate?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 254, nays 0, answered "present" 7, not voting 90; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this day:

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. WILSON.

For balance of this day:

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio with Mr. BOWIE (except public buildings).

Until next recess:

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. COCHRAN.

On this vote:

Mr. BABCOCK with Mr. NEWLANDS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. UNDERWOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. MCRAE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rose properly and in order before the Speaker announced the appointment of the conferees, to move instructions to the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the grounds, and then we will see whether they are proper or not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is one amendment to this bill that we necessarily had to vote against under these rules that I think the House should be in favor of and go on record now as in favor of. Therefore I move to instruct the House conferees to agree to Senate amendment No. 159.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule on the question. The rule adopted by the House this morning says that the Chair shall immediately appoint the conferees, and that the Chair has done, and that his duty was.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the rule does not expressly cut off instructions. Of course it provides that the Chair shall appoint the conferees, but there is no language in this rule that cuts off the right of the House to express itself, and to instruct the conferees how to act. If the Chair will look at the rule, it says:

And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend. We have no time to waste. The rule provides that—

The question shall be at once taken without debate or intervening motion on the following question: "Will the House disagree to said amendments en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?" And if this motion shall be decided in the affirmative, the Speaker shall at once appoint the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. After the Speaker has appointed the conferees is there any opportunity to instruct them, or does this rule prevent any action of that kind on the part of the House?

The SPEAKER. After the Chair has appointed them, it would be in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the Speaker hold that we have a right to instruct the conferees after they are appointed?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair was wrong. The instructions must take place before the announcement of the conferees, and this rule lets in no intervening motion. The Chair overrules the gentleman's point and recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to entertain the appeal, as dilatory.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 16970. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I object. The rules require that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will read both the report and the statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We are within the rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the conference report.

(For conference report see page 2626.)

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees, as follows:

From amendments numbered 4, 8, 10, 25, 31, 40, 45, 56, 57, 58, 60, 63, 72, 73, 74, 84, 85, 93, and 95 the Senate recedes, leaving the bill in these particulars as it left the House.

The House recedes from amendments numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 29, 34, 35, 37, 38, 41, 42, 46, 48, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 61, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 86, 87, 91, and 94.

The House recedes with an amendment to each of the following-numbered amendments: 1, 11, 27, 28, 30, 32, 33, 39, 43, 44, 47, 49, 50, 59, 62, 88, 89, 90, 92, and 95.

The Senate recedes with an amendment from amendments numbered 36 and 83.

Amendment numbered 1 is a change in the number of agents, made necessary by amendments 2 to 10, inclusive.

No. 2 strikes out the appropriation for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency.

No. 3 changes the amount from $1,500 to $1,600 for salary of the Crow Creek Agency.

No. 5 strikes out the appropriation for the Klamath Agency.

No. 6 corrects a clerical error in spelling.

No. 7 strikes out the appropriation for the Ponca Agency.

No. 9 strikes out the appropriation for the Umatilla Agency.

No. 11 changes the totals made necessary by prior amendments.

No. 12 adds the word "negotiation," which enlarges the scope of the duties of an inspector.

No. 13 provides that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may require an extra bond to be given by a disbursing officer when sums in excess of the amount covered by his ordinary bond are required to be disbursed by him.

No. 14 appropriates $40,000, which under the terms of the act of 1889 are reimbursable, to carry out the provisions of the so-called Morris bill, passed at the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, providing for the disposal of timber upon the ceded lands of the Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota. This amendment is earnestly urged by the Department.

No. 15 changes the amount of principal upon which the Kickapoo Indians shall draw interest, made necessary by the disposal, in amendment numbered 16, of a portion of the principal sum to be paid to the representative of a deceased Kickapoo, in accordance with a treaty provision.

Nos. 17 and 18 are changes of totals made necessary by the adoption of amendments numbered 15 and 16.

Nos. 19 and 20 are amendments making more clear to what treaty the provision in the section contained refers.

Nos. 21, 22, and 23 are simply changes of phraseology.

No. 24 makes available for the fiscal year 1904 the unexpended balance of the appropriation for 1903 for the support of the Apache Indians.

No. 26 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to lease a small tract of land (20 acres) belonging to the Shebit Indians to the Eastern Copper Company when three-fourths of the male Indians of said tribe consent to such lease.

No. 27 the House recedes with an amendment, making the appropriation $600,000 instead of $1,200,000. The amendment provides for the payment of the so-called loyal Creek claim. It has been mooted for some time, and it is claimed that the Senate has heretofore been made arbiters by action of both bodies of Congress, and that, acting as such, they have determined that $1,200,000 was just and due. The sum fixed herein is a compromise and provision is made in the amendment that it be accepted in full payment of all claims and demands and act as a general relief of such claim against the Government.

No. 28 provides for the traveling expenses of the judges of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, and for the employment of one stenographer for each of three judges of said court, and for the traveling expenses of the officers of said court, and appropriates $10,100 for that purpose.

No. 29 provides that the United States Supreme Court may transfer the original papers in Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship cases to the citizenship court in the Indian Territory for use by that court.

No. 30 provides for the rehearing and appeal of certain contested Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship cases, and for the payment of compensation to attorneys employed by the members of said tribes in defense of suits heretofore brought and appeals therefrom.

No. 32 provides for the limitation for the location of town sites in the Indian Territory.

No. 33 provides that the so-called Eastern Cherokee Indians may become a party to any suit or suits which may be brought in behalf of the Cherokee Nation under the act of July 1, 1902.

No. 34 simply corrects a clerical mistake.

No. 35 increases from $24,000 to $40,000 the appropriation for allotments under the act of February 8, 1887.

No. 36 provides for the removal of indigent Mississippi Choctaws from Mississippi to the Indian Territory, and appropriates $20,000 therefor, to be expended at the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Nos. 37 and 38 provide that the money therein appropriated for surveys may be used upon the Standing Rock as well as upon the Pine Ridge Indian reservations.

No. 39 authorizes the sale of certain lands owned by the Quapaw Indians, and directs the expenditure of $2,000, heretofore appropriated and not before expended, for school purposes.

No. 41 provides for the opening of the Uintah Reservation in Utah and for the extension of the time within which certain entries may be made, as provided in the act of June 19, 1902, from October 1, 1903, to October 1, 1904.

No. 42 strikes from the bill an appropriation of $6,000 which was provided for a resurvey of the western boundary of said Indian reservation.

No. 43 confirms the claims filed upon the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation prior to January 1, 1901, and provides that alternate sections of said mineral lands on said reservation shall be hereafter opened by proclamation of the President and upon terms and conditions to be prescribed by him in said proclamation.

No. 44 provides for negotiating with the Weeminuchi tribe of Indians for the ceding to the Government of a small portion of their lands in Colorado which include certain ruins and prehistoric remains.

No. 46 does not enlarge the scope of the amendment adopted last year in reference to the Mission Indians in California, but is made necessary by the ruling of the Auditor to the effect that the money appropriated in last year's act may not be used except for the removal of the Indians to the single tract.

No. 47 increases by $350 the amount of said appropriation that can be used for the payment of the commission appointed under the terms of last year's appropriation act for the choosing of a site for the said Mission Indians.

No. 48 appropriates $2,900 for the payment of surety bonds, given in the suits prosecuted against said Mission Indians by Harvey and others, commonly known as "the Warren ranch litigation."

No. 49 provides for compensation to the persons who have prepared the compilation of treaties and laws relating to Indian affairs.

No. 50 provides for compensation to certain settlers within the limits of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation who have removed therefrom, and also provides that such settlers and others like situated may exchange their lands within an Indian reservation for other Government lands within said State or Territory.

No. 51 provides for the payment to S. W. Campbell, Indian agent at La Pointe Agency, of $211 for certain attorney's fees, where the employment of the attorney was ordered by the Department.

No. 52 is an appropriation of $57 for a like purpose to Reuben Perry, of the Flambeau school, Wisconsin.

No. 53 provides for the payment of $1,200 to one Huff Jones, growing out of improvements made by him on the Chippewa Reservation, in Wisconsin, pursuant to authority granted by the then Indian agent, which authority was afterwards revoked.

No. 54 appropriates $1,498 to Peter La Blanc, a Sisseton Indian, who acted as a scout during the war of the rebellion, who did not receive this payment when the others of his tribe in 1891 received like payments because of the fact that at that time he was absent from the reservation and his name was inadvertently omitted from the roll.

No. 55 appropriates $190 to reimburse W. G. Malin, Indian agent at the Sac and Fox Indian Agency, Iowa, for court fees paid by him for the appointment of guardians for infant Indians.

No. 59 provides for the payment to Joseph H. Lee of $3,700, the amount having been carried in last year's appropriation bill to Ernest A. Lee, who is the son of Joseph H. Lee.

No. 61 permits the sale of a small portion of land not now used by the Absentee Shawnee Indians.

No. 62 authorizes the Secretary, in his discretion and upon such conditions as he may prescribe, to permit the city of Lawton, Okla., to take water from the Fort Sill boarding school lands or reservation.

No. 64 provides an appropriation of $5,000 for an auxiliary water supply at the Chamberlain school, South Dakota; No. 65 makes the appropriation for additional buildings at this school immediately available; and No. 66 is a change of the totals made necessary by No. 64.

No. 67 is a correction of an amount.

No. 68 increases the appropriation for general repairs at the Riggs Institute, South Dakota, from $3,000 to $4,000; No. 69 makes the same immediately available; and No. 70 changes the total made necessary by amendments Nos. 67 and 68.

No. 71 strikes from the bill words which are superfluous.

No. 75 reduces by $5,000 the appropriation for the Indian pupils at the Haskell School, Lawrence, Kans.

No. 76 appropriates $8,000 for the erection of new barns at this school in place of the one burned, and for the purchase of agricultural implements, teams, etc., in place of those burned.

No. 77 is a change made necessary by amendments 75 and 76.

Nos. 78 and 79 increase by $3,000 the appropriation for electric lighting at the Phoenix, Ariz., school, and provide for the institution of an electric-light plant at said school.

No. 80 is the change of total made necessary by the adoption of amendments 78 and 79.

No. 81 makes immediately available the appropriation of $16,000 for additional buildings and improvements at Rapid City School, South Dakota.

No. 82 provides that with the purchase of additional land shall be included the perpetual right for the irrigation of said land at said school.

No. 83 restores the provision stricken out by the Senate relating to the Perriss School, California, and increases from $1,800 to $2,000 the salary of the superintendent of Riverside School, California.

No. 86 authorizes the Secretary to pay out of the funds of the Otoe Indians in the Treasury the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of erecting a school plant for said Indians.

No. 87 increases by $10,000 the appropriation for the transportation of pupils.

No. 88 authorizes the use of the money appropriated for irrigation, etc., without advertising for bids therefor.

No. 89 provides that the tribal government of the Seminole Nation shall not continue beyond March 4, 1906.

No. 90 provides for the issuance of patents to various allottees, both white and Indian.

No. 91 makes it permissible for any person to trade with the Indians upon establishing to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs his responsibility and desirability as such trader.

No. 92: The House recedes with amendment. This provides for the submission of the terms of the proposed agreement with the Red Lake Indians of Minnesota, looking to the opening up of their reservation. It involves no expenditure on the part of the Government and expressly provides that in the sale and disposal of the land the United States acts solely as trustee for said Indians and assumes no obligation whatever.

No. 94 provides for submission to the Court of Claims of certain claims against the Osage Indians. It involves no liability of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think if the members of the House have closely followed the reading of the report they will have a sufficient understanding of the whole matter, so that little further need be said. The amendments as a whole add about $700,000 to the amount appropriated by the House, making the total that is carried a little over $8,000,000. The main item of appropriation added is the payment of $600,000——

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to inquire if it is the purpose of the gentleman to close the debate by the previous question?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is.

Mr. LITTLE. Shall we have any time on this side of the House?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not my intention.

Mr. LITTLE. That is in keeping with the practice of that side of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I could say all that need to be said on the matter, and I think I understand the temper of the House fairly well in reference to it. I should like to suggest to my friend from Arkansas that the report I now present has his signature at the close of it.

Mr. LITTLE. It may be true that while we favor the conference report we may not favor the manner of its adoption. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that we will not enter into any discussion of that question with my consent.

I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that the main item of appropriation added by this report is $600,000 to pay the so-called Loyal Creek claims.

This is an item which the conferees on the part of the House believe to be a gratuity; that is, that it is a claim about which we believe there was no legal obligation on the part of the Government. The contention of the Senate conferees was the reverse. Their contention was that by the act of the two Houses in referring this claim to the Senate as arbitrators in the last Congress, and by the Senate appropriating in this bill, or inserting in this bill, a provision fixing the amount of the arbitration at $1,200,000, that thereby the United States became bound to the payment of that claim of $1,200,000.

It was the claim which kept us in conference longer by many hours—yes, by several days—than we would have been but for this. At the conclusion of a protracted conference the House conferees receded, with an amendment providing that the amount paid should be $600,000, rather than $1,200,000, and with a provision that the payment of this sum should be in full for all claims in satisfaction of the claims of these Indians, and the payment should be accepted as a discharge of the United States Government from those claims. The House conferees believed it wisdom under all the circumstances to dispose of this claim now by the payment of $600,000, and believed by doing so that we would save to the Government money, because were it not paid now the Indians would surely present this claim to every succeeding Congress, and one of these days probably slip it through at $1,200,000. So we believe——

Mr. CURTIS. In view of the fact that the Senate had found in the arbitration for $1,200,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. So that we believe, in disposing of the claim as we have, we have saved to the Government $600,000.

There are several minor items added by the Senate, amounting, all told, to a trifle over $100,000. Some of them relate to schools and others to some minor little claims, but the great addition is this loyal Creek claim.

There are several new matters of legislation on the Red Lake Reservation. There is presented in this bill a proposed agreement with the Indians of that reservation for the opening up of that reservation, not by the purchase of any land by the Government, and with a provision that it shall be submitted to the tribe for ratification; and if it shall be ratified by them, it is provided expressly that the United States shall simply act as trustee in the sale and disposal of the lands, and under no circumstances be obligated for the payment of a dollar. There is also a provision in the bill if the——

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I think the gentleman is taking up the valuable time of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the report of the committee of conference.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 91, answered "present" 13, not voting 92; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how I am recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. BABCOCK. I desire to be recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present, in his seat, and listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it?

Mr. BABCOCK. I was.

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BABCOCK, and he answered "aye," as above recorded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HILL. I desire to withdraw my vote of "no" and be marked "present."

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the session:

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. PIERCE.

Until further notice:

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. GILBERT.

Mr. HILL with Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana.

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. LINDSAY.

Mr. PATTERSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

For the balance of this day:

Mr. WATSON with Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. MADDOX.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. ELLIOTT.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

As the question was being put,

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 206, nays 17, answered "present" 12, not voting 116; as follows:

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. LEWIS of Georgia.

Until 6 p. m. to-day:

Mr. GROW with Mr. BARTLETT.

On this vote:

Mr. MAHON with Mr. SMALL.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate en bloc and ask a conference with the Senate?

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for a division.

Mr. HULL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 206, nays 5, answered "present" 16, not voting 124; as follows:

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont with Mr. POU.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded; and the Speaker thereupon appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. PARKER, and Mr. SULZER as conferees on the part of the House.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on the motion of Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER proceeded to take the vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending the count, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Under the new rule adopted to-day, does the Chair hold that a motion for a recess takes priority over a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. He does.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And if we vote down this motion for a recess, then a motion to adjourn will be in order?

The SPEAKER. Well, we will cross that bridge when we come to it. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 64, answered "present" 13, not voting 123; as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a petition of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School of Absaraka, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BURNHAM presented a petition of Lakeside Council, No. 6, Daughters of Liberty, of Laconia, N. H., praying for the passage of the immigration bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Epping, N. H., and the petition of B. W. Kilburn and C. S. Kilburn, of Littleton, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Boot and Shoemakers' Union, No. 331, American Federation of Labor, of Keene, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the giving of presents, coupons, or promises of gifts with cigars or tobaccos; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented memorial of the Cigarmakers' Local Union, No. 54, American Federation of Labor, of Evansville, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the pending Cuban reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of Boot and Shoemakers' Local Union, No. 331, American Federation of Labor, of Keene, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the giving of presents, coupons, or promises of gifts with cigars and tobaccos; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCOMAS presented a petition of Local Union No. 276, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of the so-called ship-subsidy bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of James Seldon Cowdon, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish capital punishment; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 180, International Association of Machinists, of North Platte, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. I present a memorial in the matter of Reed Smoot, Senator-elect from the State of Utah. I move that the memorial be placed on the files of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS presented memorials of sundry citizens of Latah County, Idaho, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Quarles bill to repeal the desert-land law and the commutation clause of the homestead act; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALGER. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Michigan, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the commemoration of the semicentennial anniversary of the commencement of the construction of a ship canal between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, at the falls of St. Marys River, in that State. I ask that the concurrent resolution may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MICHIGAN, DEPARTMENT OF STATE, LANSING.

I, George Lord, deputy secretary of state of the State of Michigan, hereby certify that the attached copy of concurrent resolution approved February 12, 1903, is a true and correct transcript of the original, which is on file in the Department of State.

In witness whereof I have hereto affixed my signature and the great seal of the State at Lansing, this 25th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1903.

[SEAL.] GEORGE LORD,
Deputy Secretary of State.

Senate, enrolled No. 8, concurrent resolution. By Mr. Fuller.

Whereas the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of work on the ship canal and locks at the falls of the St. Marys River, between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, occurs June 4, 1903; and

Whereas the construction of this waterway was one of the most important events of the nineteenth century in the development of the internal commerce of the United States; and

Whereas the tonnage passing through the St. Marys Canal shows it to be one of the most important waterways in the world, and it has, in its half century of history, proven one of the greatest aids to the great industrial development of the world, and it has contributed as much as anything to the growth and prosperity of the United States: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass House joint resolution No. 144, now pending before that body, to provide for the commemoration of a semicentennial anniversary of the commencement of the construction of the ship canal between Lake Huron and Lake Superior, at the falls of the St. Marys River, in the State of Michigan, occurring June 4, 1903; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Michigan be requested and urged to do everything in their power to secure the passage of this House joint resolution No. 144; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Michigan; and be it further

Resolved, That the governor of the State is hereby authorized and directed to extend in the name of the State of Michigan an invitation through the governors thereof to the other States bordering on the Great Lakes, namely, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, to appoint commissioners and to actively participate in the arrangements for and in carrying out of the plans of this celebration; this invitation to convey information of the action of the State of Michigan toward the proper celebration of this event.

ALEXANDER MAITLAND,
President of the Senate.
JOHN J. CARTON,
Speaker of the House.

Approved.

AARON T. BLISS,
Governor.

RED LAKE RESERVATION IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that 1,500 copies of the act for the opening of a portion of the diminished Red Lake Reservation in the State of Minnesota be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks that a certain number of copies of an act for the opening of a portion of the diminished Red Lake Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, be printed for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4772) to fix the salary of the collector of customs at Omaha, Nebr., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17493) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for prior years, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments; and I submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate at the earliest opportunity to take up the bill for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I submit a report touching sundry brevet nominations which were sent to the Senate in the first session of this Congress, during which the committee was not able to prepare a statement and report prior to its adjournment, when the nominations were returned to the President, and have not been made at this session and no formal action can be taken by the Senate. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3420) granting a pension to Anna O. Brush; and

A bill (H. R. 17026) granting a pension to Jerome W. Turner.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I report from the Committee on Printing a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare and have issued a special edition of the Congressional Directory for the use of the special session of the Senate, should one be called, and that said edition be ready on the first day of the session, and that the same compensation be allowed for the compiling and editing of said edition as is authorized by law for the regular edition, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let the resolution be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the impression of the Chair that the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it provides for an appropriation from the contingent fund.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that it be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was about to say one word with regard to the resolution. It is a very unusual resolution, and I do not wish by vote to anticipate a called session of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $960 to pay Harry A. Nelson for extra service as mail messenger in the Senate post-office from July 1, 1900, to March 1, 1903, inclusive, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,574.19 in settlement No. 5201 of 1885, in favor of the Eureka Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, etc.; $1,744.52 in settlement No. 5201 of 1885, in favor of the Citizens' Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, etc.; $1,744.52 in settlement No. 5201 of 1885, in favor of the American Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, etc.; $2,887.10 in settlement No. 5201 of 1885, in favor of the Magnolia Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, etc., and $2,287.10 in settlement No. 5201 of 1885, in favor of the City Insurance Company of Cincinnati, Ohio, etc.; intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 16775) establishing United States courts at Duncan, Maryetta, and Comanche, Ind. T. I will state that my purpose is to move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, in order that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] may have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM JENNEY.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying Senate bill 6870, granting a pension to William Jenney, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and returned to the beneficiary, no adverse report having been made thereon.

PROPOSED ANTITRUST LEGISLATION.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to call up a bill as soon as the morning business is finished.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia rise to morning business?

Mr. BACON. It is in the nature of morning business. I wish to submit an amendment to what is known as the antitrust bill. I ask that it be printed and that it be read, simply that it may be spread upon the record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. BACON to the bill (H. R. 17) entitled "An act requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempt to destroy competition, and for other purposes," as reported with amendments from the Committee on the Judiciary February 17, 1903.

Amend section 1, page 4, of the proposed amended bill by striking out the words beginning on page 18 and ending on line 22, as follows:

"Any corporation failing to make such return or whose treasurer or other officer shall fail to make the answers aforesaid may be restrained, on the suit of the United States, from engaging in interstate commerce until such return is made."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Any corporation or officer of the same violating the provisions of this section, or refusing to comply with the requirements therein made, shall for every such act forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000, to be recovered as in other cases of penalties."

Amend further by striking out the amendment proposed by the committee, which is named in said bill as section 5, and is found on pages 8, 9, and 10, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. That no corporation engaged in interstate commerce shall, in the prosecution of such interstate commerce, attempt to monopolize the sale of any article in any State, by discriminations made for such purpose, or by giving special privileges or rebates, or by making any agreement with, or imposing any condition upon, the purchaser or his agent in restraint of trade in said article, or by any other device in order to prevent or hinder competition therein with respect to such article. Every corporation or the officer or agent of such corporation violating the provisions of this section, shall be punished for every such act on conviction by a fine of not less than $500 and not exceeding $5,000."

Amend further by striking from said bill the amendment proposed by the committee which is numbered section 6, and which is found on pages 10, 11, and 12 of said bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, it is due to myself to say that notice of these amendments was given by me to the Committee on the Judiciary at the time the bill was reported from the committee. On account of the shortness of the time and the desire for prompt action on the part of the committee, I was unable, although the effort was made by me, to then frame satisfactory amendments; and I agreed that the committee should report the bill with a reservation on my part, as members of the committee who are now present will remember, of the right to offer these amendments in the Senate.

I desire to state in one word the object of the amendments I now offer. I am in thorough sympathy with the desire to have legislation which will prevent monopoly and correct and control, as far as practicable, all those things which hinder competition. At the same time I am not willing to adopt the particular method of prevention which was reported by the committee in the amended bill, to wit, the prohibition by Congressional act of interstate commerce in any article of legitimate commerce. I am not prepared myself to recognize as a legal proposition that the power exists in Congress to prohibit interstate commerce in such articles, and if such power does exist I am unwilling to invoke it.

I am in entire sympathy with the purpose of the amended bill to prevent monopoly. I wish to accomplish the same things which the bill seeks to accomplish, but I think there are other penalties which can be made effectual without in any manner impairing what I consider to be important rights of the States, and I have in these amendments proposed such other penalties. I am not willing that there should be an invasion of this serious character of what I regard to be their fundamental rights—the invasion of the right of the people of one State to sell to the people of another State. Not only so, but I am not willing that by act of Congress the right of production should be limited and controlled in any State. I am also very firmly of the opinion that each State has the right and should continue to have the right to decide what should be the corporate organization and the corporate powers of the corporations created in such State, and that the Federal Government has not the power and should not have the power to invade the rights of the States in this regard.

For these reasons, thus briefly stated, I have felt constrained to offer these amendments to the amended bill proposed by the committee. These penalties included in the amendments offered by me are very heavy, and if they are enforced by the courts they will go a long way in preventing monopoly.

I will add further, Mr. President, that I would have added as an amendment also a provision which would have looked to the reasonable reduction of the tariff upon trust-made articles, at least to the point where, if there should be exorbitant charges, there could be reasonable foreign competition with those articles in this country. I have refrained from doing so, though, in the opinion that such legislation could not properly originate in the Senate.

NOTING OF OBJECTIONS TO BILLS.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a minute?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to make a suggestion about the business of the Senate. There are a number of bills upon the Calendar to which different Senators are opposed. We are all engaged more or less in committee work and on conference committees, and are necessarily detained from the Senate Chamber and can not be here all the time.

There ought to be some way by which the rights of Senators could be preserved in cases of that sort. I have noticed in some instances the fact that Senators are opposed to bills, and are not willing that unanimous consent shall be granted for their being taken up and passed, has been noted on the backs of the bills by the clerks. I should like to have it understood that it shall be the duty of the Chair, in such cases, to notify the Senate, whenever unanimous consent is asked for the passage of a bill and a Senator has noted on the back of the bill an objection to its consideration by unanimous consent, so that, in case the Senator should be absent from the Senate, the Senate would be advised and he might be sent for and have an opportunity to be heard before a bill shall have passed by unanimous consent to which there is objection.

I ask the consent of the Senate that that may be the order of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON. I did not quite understand the Senator from Arkansas. That does not preclude a motion to take up a bill to which objection has been made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas is, simply, that if any Senator who is to be absent from the Chamber objects to the consideration of a bill he may give a notice to the clerks, so that the Presiding Officer, when the bill is called up, may inform the Senate of the fact that such a Senator had entered an objection to it.

AMERICAN NATIONAL INSTITUTE AT PARIS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Three days ago a bill was called up to which I objected at the time, and therefore it did not pass. After conference with its friends, and a somewhat better understanding of it, I wish to call it up this morning and suggest some amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 7368) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France, may receive consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read. If there be no objection, it is before the Senate as in Committe of the Whole.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to offer some amendments. On page 1, I move to strike out in lines 3 and 4 the words:

The Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, all ex officio, and.

Mr. QUARLES. May we have the title of the bill read, so that we can understand what it is?

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 7368) to incorporate the American National Institute (Prix de Paris) at Paris, France.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state for the information of the Senate that this is a bill to provide in Paris an institution in the way of a home, a clubroom, and other quarters for American students who are there studying music, art, and other cognate branches of learning and science. The objection which I have to the bill, and which other Senators had, will be noted if Senators will get a copy of the bill. We did not want to have the United States Government associated with this institution in any manner or responsible for it other than to create a corporation which may receive donations and subscriptions, and have a continuing life rather than that it shall be merely a partnership or arrangement by individuals.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is due to say that I think this matter was brought before the Committee on Appropriations some years ago and it was turned down emphatically. I have sent for the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. They are familiar with it. I think the matter was brought up at this session.

Mr. TILLMAN. It was brought up a few days ago, and I objected to it myself because of the fact that it contained a hint at an appropriation. I propose to strike out everything in the bill which squints toward making it an appendage or a department or to place it in any connection whatever with the Government, leaving it entirely a private venture, similar to the bill we passed a week or two ago in regard to a similar institution in Rome. I have in my hand Senate bill 4980, to incorporate the American Academy at Rome, and I want to have this bill conform as nearly as practicable to the same scheme.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa present. If the amendments are made which the Senator indicates, I do not know that there will be any objection to it. I have sent for the Senator from Iowa. Let the Senator from South Carolina move his amendments.

Mr. TILLMAN. If Senators will get a copy of Senate bill 7368 they can keep track of the amendments. I move to strike out, in lines 3 and 4, on the first page, the words:

The Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury, all ex officio, and.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. In line 6 I move strike out "Von Daner" and to insert "von Daur." That is a committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. In line 7, after "Mrs.," I move to strike out "W. A." and insert "Sarah Elizabeth;" so as to read, "Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Henderson." That is also a committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. In line 11, after the word "Cary," I move to insert "Agassiz;" which is likewise a committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then on page 3 I move to strike out section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. That no moneys appropriated by the Congress of the United States of America for the benefit of said corporation shall be drawn from the Treasury of the United States except upon joint draft of two of the above-named ex officio incorporators.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move to strike out section 9, in the following words:

SEC. 9. That in case of the discontinuance of the institute in Paris, or the dissolution of the corporation, all the property of the corporation, of whatever description, in the regents thereof, which at the inception of the corporation shall consist of the above-named incorporators.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those are all the amendments I wish to offer.

Mr. HALE. What bill is this?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the bill to incorporate the American National Institute at Paris.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Maine will allow me to explain——

Mr. HALE. I wish to state that the bill came up the other day and I entered a very serious objection to it. I do not want to have it passed until I can have a full opportunity to examine it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read now as it has been amended.

Mr. HALE. Yes; I have no objection to that, but I have no time to examine it to-day, and I ask the Senator to let it go over for a day. Ordinarily, where a Senator has made an objection to a bill——

Mr. TILLMAN. I objected. The Senator merely stated his objections in speaking. I objected to its consideration and threw it overboard. Now, I have considered it, and I have conferred with those who understand its meaning, and I am trying to make it conform to a similar act which we have already passed in regard to such an institute in Rome. I want to divorce the Government from it in every possible shape, form, and fashion, and I have done so by the amendments which I have offered, and which have been agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the bill being read as amended, and then I shall ask that it may go over until I can have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests that the Senator ask that it be printed and lie over.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed as amended.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be printed as amended.

Mr. COCKRELL. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say further that if the bill is put right, and I find that it is, and that all the objections I have, which are against the Government ever being called upon to contribute to this institution, have been removed, I shall not ask that it be delayed even until to-morrow. I will examine the bill, and if I find that it is all right as amended, it may be called up during the day. But I do want to be certain that the feature of Government liability is stricken out.

The bill as amended is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Chauncey M. Depew, Thomas Hunter, Edward Walpole Warren, John D. Crimmins, Henri von Daur, Candace Wheeler, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Henderson, Sarah E. Buckbee, and Matilda Smedley, all of the city, county, and State of New York, and Joshua L. Chamberlain, who resides at Brunswick, in the State of Maine; Mrs. Elizabeth Cary Agassiz, who resides in Cambridge, Mass., their associates and successors, are hereby created a body corporate and politic in the District of Columbia, by the name of the American National Institute in Paris, France, with the right to implead and be impleaded, to adopt a constitution, by-laws, and corporate seal. The objects of this corporation are to construct a building in said city of Paris, and there to provide favorable conditions of surroundings and direction for American students, to be admitted, under proper certificates of examination of fitness, by competition, and to facilitate their studies and training in the arts and sciences, including architecture, sculpture, painting, applied design, music, dramatic art, literature, and languages.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is hereby empowered to acquire property, both real and personal, by deed, lease, devise, subscription, purchase, gift, or by any other lawful means in the United States and in Paris, France; and, in particular, is empowered to succeed to the rights and to take over, hold, and administer all the property of the American National Institute (Prix de Paris), a corporation heretofore incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, including all its scholarships, subscriptions, bequests, gifts, and pledges, and ground conceded by the municipality of the city of Paris, France.

SEC. 3. That the management and direction of all the affairs of said corporation shall be vested in the board of regents thereof, which at the inception of the corporation shall consist of the above-named incorporators.

SEC. 4 That the board of regents shall have power, upon unanimous consent of the ex officio members, to add to its number and to fill any vacancy which may occur therein by reason of death, resignation, or disability.

SEC. 5. That the board of regents shall determine the times and places of its meetings and shall determine the number, tenure, duties, and salaries of the officers, committees, and agents of the corporation.

SEC. 6. That said corporation shall be unsectarian in its management.

SEC. 7. That the president or chief officer of said corporation shall render to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, whenever thereto required, a written report of the assets and liabilities of said corporation at date of such report.

SEC. 8. That said corporation or board of regents may send each year to the Library of Congress, or such place as may be decided upon, such works of the students of the institute as may be agreed upon between the jurors of the American National Institute and the board of regents as suitable for preservation and exhibition.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16970) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and grant the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WARREN, Mr. ALGER, and Mr. PETTUS were appointed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. PERKINS, and Mr. TILLMAN were appointed.

LANDS IN LEE COUNTY, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands therein mentioned.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 6515) to exempt from taxation certain property of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Washington, D. C.;

An act (S. 7223) providing for the interment of the remains of Marie Irene Donaldson and her daughter, Marie Irene Donaldson; and

The joint resolution (S. R. 159) granting to the New York and Jersey Railroad Company the right to construct and operate an underground railway under land owned by the United States in the city of New York.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17046) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read, and that the amendments proposed by the committee be considered as they are reached in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Fortifications and other works of defense," on page 2, line 4, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase land on Cushings Island, Portland Harbor, Maine, for which appropriation was made in the act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, etc., approved June 6, 1902, at such times and in such parcels and quantity as may appear to him to be for the best interests of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 21, to insert:

It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to apply the money herein appropriated under the heading "Fortifications and other works of defense" in carrying on the various works, by contract or otherwise, as may be most economical and advantageous to the Government. Where said works are done by contract, such contract shall be made after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution and completion of the work according to such contract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 5, line 24, to increase the appropriation for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns manufactured by contract under the provisions of the fortifications acts, approved August 18, 1890, and February 24, 1891, from $145,000 to $199,473.22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5 on page 7.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to amend the bill by striking out the last paragraph read, in the following words:

For steel breech-loading field guns and their carriages, including sights, implements, equipments, etc., $265,000.

And inserting in lieu thereof:

For purchase, manufacture, alterations, and repair of steel breech-loading field guns and their carriages, including sights, implements, equipments, and tools or machinery necessary for their manufacture at arsenals, $265,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Board of Ordnance and Fortification," on page 10, after line 13, to insert:

A. H. EMERY ELEVATING CARRIAGE.

To enable A. H. Emery to complete and erect the 12-inch elevating carriage he is building for the Government the Secretary of War, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to increase the contract price of such carriage and its foundations from $150,000 to $190,000; and to enable the Secretary of War to make this increase in the price of this work and to make payment therefor the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill has been concluded.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator from California the total amount of the appropriations made by the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. The estimate made by the Government in its Book of Estimates was $15,004,420; the supplemental estimate was $220,900, making a total of $15,225,320. The bill as it passed the House and came to the Senate amounted to $7,093,943. The Senate Committee on Appropriations have increased this amount $94,473.22, making the amount appropriated by the bill as it now stands $7,188,416.22, or less than 50 per cent, about 47 per cent, of the estimates made by the Government.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator if any estimate has been made in relation to the fortification and protection of the interoceanic canal which is in contemplation at this time?

Mr. PERKINS. None has been embodied in the bill for that purpose.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will ask the Senator if he understands that any appropriation in the future will be necessary for that purpose?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a question for Congress in its wisdom to determine. Mr. President, your committee only considered the questions submitted to them, as to the appropriations for our fortifications and emplacements for guns, to mount and properly defend our coast ports and to have in store rapid-fire guns, Gatling guns, mortars, and other reserve stock.

There was a proposition made, I will say, to appropriate of the million and a half that was asked for $500,000 for foundations and emplacements for our insular possessions; but your committee believed that this was not an opportune time to consider it, and therefore they declined to accept the amendment as recommended by the Chief of Engineers through the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator if any appropriation is made in the bill for fortification or other means of defense in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. PERKINS. None is embodied in this bill. I think under the general provision of the law the Secretary of War could direct the sending of guns to the Hawaiian Islands or to Alaska or any other of our possessions, but no specific appropriation is made in this bill for any of the insular possessions of the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. As the Senator is very familiar with this subject, I should like to ask him one other question. In his opinion, resulting from such investigation as he, as chairman of this subcommittee, has made upon the subject, does the Senator believe that there can or will be any expenditure made by the Government of the United States with a view to the protection or fortification of the canal which it is proposed by pending treaties and otherwise shall be constructed?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I have no authority whatever to speak on the part of the committee, for they have never given any expression on the subject. My own judgment, however, is that the best fortification that the country can have is that of neutrality. That is the strongest fortification, because it has the defense of every maritime country of the world.

I call to the mind of my friend from Utah the fact that Switzerland and Belgium are the strongest fortified countries in Europe or in the world to-day, and that neither one of them has a fort or a gun mounted upon an embattlement. It is because the great powers of Europe have agreed that there shall be neutrality in Switzerland and Belgium, and, although the capital of one of those countries is but a few miles from Waterloo, where the great battle was fought, there has not been a hostile shot fired upon that neutral land in fifty or sixty years or more. I believe it is wisdom on the part of this Government if we construct the isthmian canal to have it neutral, and then we shall have the cooperation, the support, and the defense of every nation of the world.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator correctly, he stated that the committee had made no appropriation in this bill for the fortification or defense of the Philippine Islands. Is that correct?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; I so understand it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, in this connection, without a desire to detain the Senate at length, there are some considerations to which I think the attention of the Senate ought to be invited.

I am not one of those who have favored the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, nor am I in favor—I may perhaps express now without impropriety—of the ratification of the pending treaty, to which some attention is being given by the Senate. As I shall not have an opportunity to give the reasons why I have assumed this attitude in the past, I desire to do it at the present time as briefly and as concisely as I can.

The Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has compared the Panama Canal, if it shall be constructed under the scheme which is now under consideration, to Switzerland. He says that the nations of Europe have guaranteed the neutrality of that country, and that for fifty years that has been ample protection. I suppose his inference is that if under the present arrangement the isthmian canal is constructed, it will have a sufficient protection in the guaranty of all nations for its neutralization.

The Senator from California by this admission concedes that the United States alone is not to have control of the canal, and that it is to be maintained in accordance with the principle of neutralization embodied in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and reaffirmed and continued in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. I have those treaties before me. The second article of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which has been ratified by the Senate and is now, of course, a law and has full publicity, prescribes the conditions under which this canal is to be constructed and operated. I will read that article:

The high contracting parties, desiring to preserve and maintain the "general principle" of neutralization established in Article VIII of the Clayton-Bulwer convention, which convention is hereby superseded, adopt, as the basis of such neutralization, the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention between Great Britain and certain other powers, signed at Constantinople October 22, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Maritime Canal; that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open, in time of war as in peace, to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

Mr. President, it will be noted that this first article preserves the general principle of neutralization, and that when this canal is constructed it shall be free and open in time of war as in time of peace to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of the conditions or charges of traffic, or otherwise.

The following paragraphs provide:

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it.

3. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not revictual nor take any stores in the canal except so far as may be strictly necessary; and the transit of such vessels through the canal shall be effected with the least possible delay, in accordance with the regulations in force, and with only such intermission as may result from the necessities of the service.

Prizes shall be in all respects subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerents.

4. No belligerent shall embark or disembark troops, munitions of war or warlike materials in the canal except in case of accidental hindrance of the transit, and in such case the transit shall be resumed with all possible dispatch.

5. The provisions of this article shall apply to waters adjacent to the canal, within three marine miles of either end. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not remain in such waters longer than twenty-four hours at any one time except in case of distress, and in such case shall depart as soon as possible; but a vessel of war of one belligerent shall not depart within twenty-four hours from the departure of a vessel of war of the other belligerent.

It is agreed, however, that none of the immediately foregoing conditions and stipulations in sections Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this article shall apply to measures which the United States may find it necessary to take for securing by its own forces the defense of the United States and the maintenance of public order.

6. The plant, establishments, buildings, and all works necessary to the construction, maintenance and operation of the canal shall be deemed to be part thereof, for the purposes of this convention, and in time of war as in time of peace shall enjoy complete immunity from attack or injury by belligerents and from acts calculated to impair their usefulness as part of the canal.

7. No fortifications shall be erected commanding the canal or the waters adjacent. The United States, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such military police along the canal as may be necessary to protect it against lawlessness and disorder.

When we turn back to the general principle of neutralization as embodied in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty we find that this principle is to be maintained with the guaranty of the United States and Great Britain and of such other nations as may, upon invitation, give their adhesion to this policy. The United States is therefore not to have the exclusive control of this canal when it is constructed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does the Senator understand that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is now in force and that its provisions are binding?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the vital general principle of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, namely, the general principle of neutralization, is expressly continued in force by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, otherwise the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is superseded by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. We must, therefore, try to ascertain the significance of the general principle of neutralization by a reference to the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and when we go back to ascertain what the general principle of neutralization is, we find it to be that upon the construction of the canal it is to be dedicated to the commerce of the world, to the ships of war as well as to the ships of commerce, upon precise terms of equality; and this principle is under the protecting care not of the United States alone, but of the parties to the treaty—the United States and Great Britain and such other nations as may give adhesion to the principle thus enunciated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But the point I had in mind was this: Does the Senator understand that after our treaty, which we have adopted, any other nation can now come in and give adhesion to the principle of neutralization?

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I so understand, and that seems to be the understanding of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] in charge of this bill relating to fortifications. I will briefly give my reasons for that opinion.

When this canal has been constructed, when it has been dedicated in accordance with the terms of the treaty stipulation with Great Britain, pursuant to which it is to be constructed and maintained to the commerce of all nations, the ships of war as well as the ships of peace, every nation at once has secured to it an interest, a concern in and about the canal and its management, just as every citizen of a community for whose benefit a highway has been dedicated acquires an interest in the maintenance of that highway in accordance with the terms of the dedication. The United States is thus deprived of the control of the canal immediately upon its completion. It has such interest in it as is provided in the stipulations of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty—namely, the right to regulate tolls, with the qualification that those tolls shall not be unreasonable, and with the further qualification that those tolls must be uniform; but otherwise it has no right or interest in this canal, except such as pertain to every nation on the globe to whose commerce the canal is to be dedicated.

We are precluded from fortifying the canal; we are forbidden to take any effectual means for its defense; we are limited to such protection as may be afforded by the guaranty of the different nations interested in the preservation of the general principle of neutrality. What that amounts to, of course, will depend wholly upon the exigencies of the future, in case that one nation may become hostile to another nation and a condition of war may prevail.

Now, I should like to invite the attention of the Senate for one moment to the proposition of this guaranty of other nations, this right of invitation to the nations of Europe to intermeddle in the affairs of this continent and to interfere in regard to the control of a canal which is to be constructed with moneys taken from the people of the United States.

What will this guaranty amount to? For instance, the moment the canal is constructed and thrown open to commerce assume a condition of war existing between the United States and any other nation or any combination of nations, and the use and control of the canal will be of the utmost strategic importance, and any guaranty arising out of the provisions of any treaty between two nations, the moment a declaration of war is made between them, is abrogated and its obligation is no longer binding. There is at once an appeal to force and to arms. Every Senator must appreciate the fact that the moment such an exigency arises the United States, of course, for the sake of self-preservation, will desire to have absolute control of the canal and to shut out the belligerents; but she will be confronted with the obligation of the treaty stipulation into which she has entered with Great Britain, that this canal shall never be blockaded either in time of war or in time of peace; and the moment she does undertake to blockade it to the commerce of other nations than the one with which she happens to be engaged in war they have a right to point to our stipulation in that regard and say, "This canal must not be shut to our trade and commerce."

Then, instead of having war with one nation, we shall have cause of war with many nations, and if they may for that cause actually engage in war and send their combined fleets, they may seize the canal, wrest it from the control of this country, and that means any advantage which the canal might be to us as a means of public defense will be taken away. Not only would it be taken away from us, but the nation having the most powerful fleet, or the combination of nations having the most powerful fleet, in case of war with us, we know will seize and will control that canal and that strip of land which now affords, in a way, protection to our commerce upon the Pacific Ocean and, to a degree, our commerce upon the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico. Our enemies, having control of the canal, can send their ships of war either into the Pacific or into the Atlantic to assail our commerce. They are at once secured a highway and an easy means of access to attack the cities and commerce upon our Pacific coast as well as our insular possessions in the Pacific Ocean.

As pointed out by the military strategists, men who have devoted time and attention to this subject, and have written extensively upon it, our military and naval commanders, we are ignoring the advice which they have given in this respect. They have declared that a canal constructed in accordance with the principle of neutralization, as embodied in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and perpetuated in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, would not only not add any strength to our sources of defense, but would be a source of great military and naval weakness.

Mr. President, Congress in providing appropriations for the construction of this canal, in specifying the conditions upon which the appropriations for the construction of this canal are to take effect, seems to have been imbued with the importance of this matter, for in section 2 of that act it is provided:

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land, the territory of the Republic of Colombia, not less than 6 miles in width, extending from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon a canal of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Caribbean Sea to the Pacific Ocean, which control shall include the right to perpetually maintain and operate the Panama Railroad, if the ownership thereof, or a controlling interest therein, shall have been acquired by the United States, and also jurisdiction over said strip and the ports at the ends thereof to make such police and sanitary rules and regulations as shall be necessary to preserve order and preserve the public health thereon, and to establish such judicial tribunals as may be agreed upon thereon as may be necessary to enforce such rules and regulations.

The President may acquire such additional territory and rights from Colombia as in his judgment will facilitate the general purpose hereof.

Mr. President, notwithstanding the original treaty with Great Britain, known as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and the provisions of those treaties which provide for the dedication of this canal to the use of all nations upon equal terms, Congress seems not to have been satisfied, and has provided in section 2 for the perpetual control by the United States of the territory through which this canal was to be constructed. It is scarcely necessary for me to allude to the fact that in the stress to begin this work and to obtain the money which is provided for in the act of Congress to which I have made reference it is now sought to dispense with the very conditions upon which the appropriation has been made. We are not to have governmental control of any strip of territory; the sovereignty of the existing Government is in no wise to be affected.

I speak now of matters which are public, to which I feel justified in calling attention, not desiring to refer to any matter that might more properly be considered in executive session.

The stipulations which I have read, contained in section 2 of the act of Congress "to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," were designed by Congress to be conditions precedent to the taking effect of the appropriation which is provided for in section 3 of this act. Section 3 says:

SEC. 3. That when the President shall have arranged to secure a satisfactory title to the property of the New Panama Canal Company, as provided in section 1 hereof, and shall have obtained by treaty control of the necessary Territory from the Republic of Colombia, as provided in section 2 hereof, he is authorized to pay for the property of the New Panama Canal Company $40,000,000 and to the Republic of Colombia such sum as shall have been agreed upon, and a sum sufficient for both said purposes is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrant or warrants drawn by the President.

It will thus be seen that Congress has made that appropriation dependent expressly upon the fulfillment of the conditions precedent which are specified in section 2 of the act. I am not going to discuss the question as to whether the Senate, in being called upon to ratify the treaty submitted by the Executive, ought to consent to any substantial departure from the conditions which Congress saw fit to specify and make precedent to the taking effect of this appropriation. Of course the rule is that when a treaty has once been approved and ratified in the constitutional way if it requires legislation to carry it into effect it is generally considered that there is an obligation of honor on the part of Congress to enact the necessary legislation to give effect to the treaty; but I submit, Mr. President, that in a case of such great public importance as this, involving not merely the commercial welfare of the people of the United States, but materially affecting their means of public defense, when Congress, after deliberation and long consideration, has provided a condition, namely, governmental perpetual control of the territory through which the canal is constructed, Congress ought to have the privilege, first, before it is placed under any obligation to enact the legislation to carry that treaty into effect, to determine whether or not it will make a departure or modification of such condition.

Mr. President, it has been said—and it seems to me the contention can not be controverted—that the money provided in this act, dependent as it is upon the condition to which I have alluded, can not be drawn from the Treasury until the condition has been complied with. Senators say "substantially performed," but I submit that no money can be drawn from the Treasury under the Constitution except by a specific appropriation to that end; and, if I am not mistaken as to the practice, the condition must not only be substantially but must be literally, must be precisely, complied with. Anyone who has had any experience with the Comptroller of the Treasury knows how strictly that Department has been in the habit of scrutinizing the right to draw money from the Treasury and exacting that there be a literal compliance with the terms upon which the appropriation has been made by Congress.

It is not going to serve any purpose to expedite action upon any treaty if that treaty can not be carried into effect without legislation of Congress, and I submit that it is appropriate, under the circumstances now surrounding us, that the consideration of Congress should be invited to this matter in advance of any action on the part of the executive department, with the concurrence of the Senate; in other words, it seems to me that Congress should be free to act upon this matter of reappropriating this money entirely untrammeled by any obligation arising from treaty stipulations between this Government and some other Government.

Mr. President, if I have made myself clear, if the present pending treaty is ratified and Congress shall have reappropriated this money to carry it into effect, the people of the United States will find in the end that they are in a predicament when they shall have completed this canal, at what cost can now only be a matter of conjecture. It is only partly constructed, at a cost of something more than $275,000,000; this act appropriates $40,000,000, and if the ratio of cost for the completion of the canal shall continue as the cost has in the past—and we have no reason to suppose it will be otherwise—it is safe to say that the people of the United States will not see the completion of this canal before there has been an expenditure of perhaps $400,000,000. This money is taken from the Treasury of the United States, and the canal is dedicated to the use of the commerce of all the world. The territory through which the canal is constructed is not within any governmental control of the United States. The treaty expressly provides that the sovereignty over this strip of territory shall in no wise be affected by the provisions of the treaty and the construction of the canal in accordance with the terms of the treaty which is now pending.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. RAWLINS. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that it seems to me improper to refer to a treaty now under consideration and either directly or by indirection state what that treaty provides. I do not know that I caught exactly what the Senator said, but I understood him to refer to some treaty which was under consideration and to suggest that that treaty did not conform to the provisions of the act of Congress which he has recited. If I correctly understood him, I think he will agree with me that that ought not to be done.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to allude to anything that would infringe the rule of the Senate. The treaty itself has been made public. The Senator misapprehended what I said. I had discussed the act of Congress and its requirements and the conditions upon which it had made the appropriation of money for the construction of this canal dependent. That is a legitimate subject of consideration in open legislative session.

The only allusion which I made to the pending treaty was that if the canal is constructed in the end the people of the United States will find themselves in the predicament of having expended probably $400,000,000 for the construction of a canal dedicated on equal terms to the use of the commerce of all nations, ships of war as well as other vessels, and that the sovereignty of the United States of Colombia over the territory through which the canal is constructed will be unaffected by the stipulations of the treaty under which the canal is constructed. That does not involve any disclosures which are not already public. I am not discussing anything which every Senator and every citizen in the United States may not know by the record which the Senate has made public.

I may further state that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, of which full publicity has been given, and which has been ratified and is now a law of the United States, has, in so far as it prescribes any rules of conduct and is a compact between nations, precludes positively any fortification of this territory on the part of the United States. Not only is the sovereignty of the United States of Colombia unaffected by the treaty under consideration, but the perpetual independence and the continuance of that sovereignty in all its plenitude and force over our property are guaranteed by the United States, and the sovereignty over the islands which might in a way guard the entrance to the canal at its two ends is absolutely secured by the guaranty of the United States, coupled with its continued independence under similar guaranty forever, and the sovereignty over this property, constructed at the cost of $400,000,000, is in another nation and not in the United States.

While Congress contemplated perpetual governmental control, it is now proposed to surrender every vestige of governmental control and leave the United States in the attitude of a private corporation, expending the money wrested under public law from the people of the United States, not for the benefit of the United States in time of war as a means of public defense, but to be dedicated to all the nations of the earth, with the recognition of the right of interference by European nations in the affairs of this continent and with the property which our money has created, as expressly stipulated in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. So we have a property which is not our property. The Government of the United States takes money from its Treasury and dedicates it, through a private corporation——

Mr. MASON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the first Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which never became a law as between the two Governments, provided that no fortifications should be erected, and in the second treaty that section was entirely stricken out. Under all law of construction, it is the same as if direct power had been given to the Government of the United States to fortify the canal, which is the reason that many of us voted for the second Hay-Pauncefote treaty. So now it is clearly within the power of the Government of the United States to fortify the canal. Is there any doubt of that in the mind of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. RAWLINS. I have not any doubt that the proposition of the Senator from Illinois has no foundation upon which to rest. In the first place, the Government of the United States has no governmental control over the territory through which the canal is to be constructed. It is under the sovereignty of another independent nation. Its control of that territory is absolutely recognized and guaranteed. The Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which was ratified by the Senate and became a law, expressly defined the conditions under which the canal should be constructed, and, as I have already pointed out, recognized and continued the general principle of neutrality which was designed to secure the protection of the canal by treaty obligation on the part of the United States and Great Britain and such other nations as might yield their adhesion to that stipulation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. That the treaty which we made——

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not want to cut off the final address of the Senator.

Mr. RAWLINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator has been discussing a matter which should be discussed in executive session. It seems to me there can be no question about that. I do not want to seem to be at all rigid about this matter, and as the Senator will have no opportunity to discuss it, except for a few days, I do not intend to be too restrictive about it. But I think the Senator himself must see that this treaty ought not to be discussed in open session. I do not know what the Senator's intentions are or how long he expects to go on with this discussion, but it seems to me that certainly this speech ought not to be made in open session.

Mr. RAWLINS. I was not alluding to the pending treaty. I was referring to the treaty which has been ratified by the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the Senator has constantly been alluding to the pending treaty and discussing its provisions and the effect which those provisions will have upon other legislation. I think the Senator knows as well as I do and as the other members of the Senate do that that is a discussion of the Panama treaty, and I would suggest that that discussion be restricted within very narrow limits, or that it ought to be made in executive session.
